

UNWELCOME WEDDING GUESTS

Coal holes are obsolete in these days of wide skirts.

from an obscure side street, who dons her best regularly during the open season for weddings, and joins the pushing, gaping crowds about the awnings. She patiently awaits the coming of the bridal party to take note of the "smart" frocks, freshly turned out from the atelier of some Paris creator. It is largely a business proposition with her—she is after ideas.

More often it is the proprietor of some grand establishment on the avenue, who bee-lines to every fashionable church wedding, awaits her chance to squeeze in "along of a regular invite" and then pass as one of the family group. Once in the haven of a church pew, she drops devoutly to her knees, averting suspicion until the organ's bourdon begins that "here-comes-the-bride" thing.

All the world loves a lover and the striped attempts at privacy at the church portals are but calls to arms to the sentimentalists who evince an especial fondness for lovers soon to become merely married—instead of lovers. Perhaps, after all, the bulk of the "Wedding Fans" are of the sentimental persuasion. When the ever-popular Alice Roosevelt was married a small girl dashed out from the crowds and placed a grimy hand on the bride's veil, then dashed back again to be welcomed with: "Did you touch 'er, dearie?" from the mother.

From a London crowd one sometimes received the personal verdict as was the case when one of England's oldest and best, a man of diminutive proportions, mated with a tall, stately beauty.

"Ain't 'e th' little white rabbit!" came from stammerer. There are ways and ways of getting in—just as there are of getting out. For example some of the fans at May Golet's wedding to the Duke of Roxburghe entered the church by means of the coal hole. Wide skirts have made this difficult for the feminine gender, however.

Claiming kinship, however distant, is a favorite "device." Your aggressive, burglarly fan stops at nothing to get in. A better milliner usually adopts these methods.

At a still remembered wedding in London, in which the contracting parties were closely affiliated on the one side with the shoe industry, and on the other with an Italian table d'hote, the desire of a certain male creator to get a "look in" led him to tell a "bobby" he was the bridegroom. It happened, however, that the "bobby" read the papers and he "jolly well outed the blighter" you may believe, "'s 'elp me if he didn't." The pretender's make-up was "tout en regle" but his accent was "nil," or something like that.

The police are fast becoming essential at our fashionable weddings.

JUNE—magic month of blossoms, of dreams, fulfilled and yet to be, is upon us and with it comes the ever lovely bride and the negligible bridegroom, the not always lovely wedding and the wholly unlovely "Wedding Fan."

Not your sweet-scented, delicate bit of lace and ivory, dangling from the arm of the bride, or in a moment of fluttering consciousness, serving to shield her blushes from a too-curious world. Oh, dear no! Nothing of the sort!

The "Wedding Fan" is a pest, an unmitigated, unadulterated nuisance, from the standpoint of those on the "inside," at least, a public peeping-tom, a beast of prey, a vulgar pushing person to whom the sight of a striped awning outside the portals of a city church is the signal for commencement of his machinations. Aye, more! He needs no striped canvas, no splash of scarlet velvet reaching across the pavement to start him on his journey of impertinence. Two lines in the penny paper of a June morning, and presto! the germ is alive, crying for quick liberation.

"The marriage of Miss Charibel Astor Vanderbilt, only daughter of Townsend DeLancy Vanderbilt, to Mortimer Spuyten DuYvil Tuxedo, will be solemnized at the Fifth Avenue Church of the Apostles on Wednesday next at 4 o'clock."

This is sufficient to awaken the germ in the "Wedding Fan" and cause it to demand to be taken out for a little exercise. Mostly it is a female germ, keen with the heritage of Pandora, for insinuating itself into forbidden places.

Sex curiosity, desire to borrow a thrill from the joyous exaltation of the young bride, a yearning to gaze on the trappings of a world in which she plays no part, to discern wherein lies the difference between her Eighth ave. "steady" and the titled fiancée of the Fifth ave. heiress, are some motives. And the higher the contractin' parties, the keener the appetite of the 'umble fan or faness, for a "nose-in" at the show.

"Nose-in," "toes-in," any-way-to-get-in, is the motto of your chronic wedding "bug," to whom invitations are never counted among the requisites of sight-seeing in High Society. The fashionable church wedding, calling for "cards of admittance," has a lure all its own to one of these creatures of the polished brass front row.

Imperturbable, rebuff-proof, case-hardened against mere insults from minions, these determined devotees of Hymen, who by no other means than plain larceny, could possibly put their thumbprints on the precious, engraved (they feel of it to see) pasteboard, yet somehow find their devious way, trusting to miracle or lie for an open sesame, past the police, past the ushers, up the aisle and sometimes even to the sacrosanct precincts of the "family pew."

At a Fifth ave. wedding a fortnight since, a handsome, dignified "grand dame" and her pretty "daughter," both impeccably attired, were halted at the church door on their failure to produce the proper passports.

The "mother's" first cue was pretense at not understanding and with a supercilious eyebrow at the delay, swept on toward the center aisle. Usher No. 3 tapped her on the arm, meaning "Come across, or right-about-face." Did she weep? Oh, none of such!

Instead a great indignation inspired her and "daughter" added her pretty protest, not a bit overdone. Finally when the old dear found her progress permanently impeded, she condescended to open her daunting opera bag and search for those "really quite unnecessary cards."

Daughter joined in the quest and both exchanged orientational glances of puzzled (sic) dismay when the cards remained "hid out."

"Why, mother dear, I saw them in the limousine," said "daughter," but the ushers had ushered before—"no card, no see."

By this time groups of hidden guests, holding crested credentials, who had been pouring forth from motors, were frothing at the mouth.

"Why, I went to school with her mother," protested the "grand dame" as the bride's party went in but a few feet away. "Little Gladys here is such a friend of the groom's. Surely we can have seats without those stupid cards."

Surely they couldn't! The suspicious ushers, who possessed the instincts of headquarters detectives, with quiet but firm pressure on the shoulder, escorted those who had attempted to "horn in" to the vestibule, where the angry views of both became audible and culminated in a tirade of Bowery blasphemy, at the ushers, the bride, her parents and grandparents, the church and all future functions of the "Upper Ten."

"Can you beat it?" asked the ushers. "From all walks of life come the 'Wedding Fans.' With some, insatiable curiosity for all doings of the "beau monde," seems congenital and all ages, they are on the "qui vive" at the first notice of any function, whether wedding or funeral. These are the morbidly curious, as omnipresent as the innocent bystanders, always to be found, an anticipatory foot across the "dead line."

FIFTEENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

Stanford Quest, master criminologist of the world, finds that in bringing to justice MacDougal, the murderer of Lord Ashleigh's daughter, he has but just begun a life-and-death struggle with a mysterious master criminal. In a hidden hut in Professor Ashleigh's garden he has seen an ape skeleton and a living creature, half monkey, half man, destroyed by fire. In his rooms have appeared black boxes containing notes, signed by a pair of armless hands. Laura and Lenora, his assistants, suspect Craig, the professor's servant, of a double murder. The black boxes continue to appear in uncanny fashion. Craig, captured, escapes to Fort Said. Quest and his party follow, and beyond into the desert. They are captured by Mongars, escape with Craig as their captive. They turn him over to Inspector French in San Francisco. He escapes in a train wreck, outgenerals his pursuers, and goes back to New York, where he dies while Quest is attempting to hypnotize him into confession.

CHAPTER XXXV.

The first shock was over. Craig's body had been removed, and the girls had taken Mary, half stunned with grief, to their room. French and Quest were left alone.

"This is some disappointment," the former remarked, gloomily.

"It is a disappointment," Quest said, slowly, "which may clear the way to bigger things."

"What's in your mind now?" French inquired.

Quest shook his head.

"A turmoil. First of all, where is the professor?"

"Must have scooted right away home," French suggested. "He was looking pretty sick all the time. Guess it must have been a powerful shock for him, and he isn't so young as he used to be."

"Give me that paper of Craig's again," Quest asked, stretching out his hand.

The inspector produced the document from his inner pocket, and Quest, stretching it out upon his knee, read it word for word.

"Never to communicate or to have anything to do with anyone of the name of Ashleigh, eh?" he remarked, as he handed it back again. "Rather a queer provision, that, French."

"I've been thinking that myself," the inspector admitted. "Seems to be rather reversing the positions, doesn't it?"

Quest glanced at the clock.

"Well," he said, "if you're ready, inspector, we'll be getting along."

The two men drove to the outskirts of the city almost in silence. The professor's house seemed more than ever deserted as they drew up at the front door. They entered without ringing and crossed the hall towards the library. On the threshold Quest paused and held up his finger.

"Someone is in there," he whispered, stepping quickly forward. "Come!"

He threw open the door. The room was empty, yet both Quest and French were conscious of a certain conviction that it had been occupied within the last few seconds. French even shook out the curtains and swung open the doors of a bureau. There was no sign of anybody, however, nor any evidence as to how they could have left the room.

"Queer, but it seemed to me I heard someone," French muttered.

"I was sure of it," Quest replied, shaking the curtain at the back of the door.

They stood still for a moment and listened. The silence in the empty house was almost unnatural. Quest turned away with a shrug of the shoulders.

"At any rate," he said, "Craig's dying thoughts must have been truthful. Come."

He led the way to the fireplace, went down on his knees and passed his hands over the bricks. The third one he touched, shook. He tapped it—without a doubt it was hollow. With his penknife he loosened the mortar a little and drew it out easily. The back was open. Inside was the black box.

"Craig's secret at last!" French muttered, hoarsely. "Bring it to the light, quick!"

They were unemotional men, but the moment was supreme. The key to the mystery of these logical weeks was there in their hands! Their eyes almost devoured those few hastily scrawled words hurried with so much care:

See page 62, January number, American Medical Journal, 1905.

They looked at one another. They repeated vaguely this most commonplace of messages. As the final result of their strenuous enterprise, these cryptic words seemed pitifully inadequate. Quest's face darkened. He crumpled the paper in his fingers.

"There must be some meaning in this," he muttered. "It can't be altogether a fool's game we're on. Wait."

He moved towards a table which usually stood against the wall, but which had obviously been dragged out recently into the middle of the room. It was covered with bound volumes. Quest glanced at one and exclaimed softly:

"American Medical Journal, 1905! French, there's something in this message, after all."

He turned over the pages rapidly. Then he came to a stop. Page 61 was there; page 62 had been neatly removed with a pair of scissors.

"The professor!" he cried. "The professor's been at work here!"

The two men stood looking at one another across the table. Strange thoughts were framing themselves in the brains of both of them. Then there came a startling and in its way a dramatic interlude. Through the empty house came the ringing of the electric bell from the front door, shrill and insistent. Without a moment's hesitation, Quest hurried out and French followed him. On the doorstep was another surprise. Lenora and Laura were there, the former carrying a small, black-bound volume.

"Don't be cross," she begged, quickly. "We just had to come. Look! We picked this up underneath the chair where Craig was sitting. It must have slipped from his pocket. You see what is written on it—Diary of John Craig."

Quest took it in his hand.

"Say, this ought to be interesting," he remarked. "Come along."

They passed into the library. French lingered behind for a moment and caught them up just as they were opening the book underneath the electric lamp.

"See here what I've found!" he exclaimed. "It was just by the side of the wall there. Where's that magazine?"

He spread out the piece of paper—it fitted exactly into the empty space. They all read together:

Professor Ashleigh, after being bitten by the antrophoid, rapidly developed hydrophobia of a serious nature. After treatment with a new serum the patient was relieved of the hydrophobic sympoms, but to my horror this mild-mannered, humane man seems possessed at times of all the characteristics of the brutal anthrophoid—cunning, thievery, brutality. I do not know what may come of this. I hesitate to put even these words on to paper. I am doubtful as to what course, in the interests of humanity, I ought to take.

(Signed) JAMES MERRILL, M. D.

Editor's Note—Just as we go to press, a cable announces the terrible death of Doctor Merrill, the writer of the above notes. He was attacked by wild animals whilst alone in a South American jungle, and torn to pieces.

There was a queer silence among the company. No one seemed inclined for speech. They looked at one another in dumb, wondering horror. Then Quest drew a penknife from his pocket and with a turn of his wrist forced the lock of the diary. They all watched him with fascinated eyes. It was something to escape from their thoughts. They leaned over as he spread the book out be-power. Then at last Quest found words.

"There is no one in the room, professor," he said, "except us."

The sound of a human voice seemed to produce a strange effect. The professor straightened himself, shook his head, his hands dropped to his side, ghastly pale, but his smile was once more the smile of the amiable naturalist.

"My friends," he said, "forgive me. I am very old, and the events of these last few hours have nervous me. Forgive me."

He groped for a moment and sank into a chair. Quest fetched a decanter and a glass from the sideboard, poured out some wine and held it to his lips. The professor drank it eagerly.

"My dear friend," he exclaimed, "you have saved me! I have something to tell you, something I must tell you at once, but not here. I loathe this place. Let me come with you to your rooms."

He gripped Quest's arm. In silence they passed from the room, in silence they took their places simultaneously the mirror for a moment was clouded—then slowly a picture upon it gathered outline and substance. There was a jungle, strange, tall trees, and brushwood so thick that it reached to the waists of the two men who were slowly making their way through it. One was the professor; the other a stranger to all of them. Suddenly they stopped. The latter had crept a yard or so ahead, his gun raised to his shoulder, his eyes fixed upon some possible object of pursuit. There was a sudden change in the professor. They saw him seize his gun by the barrel and whirl it above his head. He seemed suddenly to lose his whole identity. He crouched on his haunches, almost like an animal, and sprang at the other's throat. They could almost hear the snarl from his lips as the two men went down together in the undergrowth. The picture faded away.

"Doctor Merrill!" Lenora faltered. "Then it was not wild beasts which killed him?"

Almost immediately figures again appeared in the mirror. There was a small passage which seemed to lead from the back entrance of a house; the professor, with a black mantle, Craig following him, pleading, expostulating. They saw the conservatory for a minute, and then blackness. The professor was leaning against a marble basin. There was nothing to be seen of him but his eyes and hands. They saw him listen for a moment or two in cold, unresponsive silence, then stretch out his hand and push Craig away. The picture glowed and faded and glowed again. Then they saw through the gloom the figure of a this is the end. A person in extremis has privileges. Will you allow me to write just a matter of twenty lines at your desk?"

Silently Quest assented. The professor seated himself in the wing chair, drew a sheet of paper towards him, dipped the pen in the ink and began to write. Then he turned round and reached for his own small black bag which lay upon the table. Quest caught him by the wrist.

"What do you want out of that, professor?" he inquired.

"Merely my own pen and ink," the professor expostulated. "If there is anything I detest in the world, it is violet ink. And your pen, too, is excusable. As these are to be the last words I shall leave to a sorrowing world, I should like to write them in my own fashion. Open the bag for yourself, if you will. You can pass me the things out."

Quest opened the bag, took out a pen and a small glass bottle of ink. He handed them to the professor, who started once more to write. Quest watched him for a moment and then turned away to French. The professor looked over his shoulder and suddenly bared his wrist. Lenora seized her employer by the arm.

"Look!" she cried. "What is he going to do?"

Quest swung round, but he was too late. The professor had dug the pen into his arm. He sat in his chair and laughed as they all hurried towards him. Then suddenly he sprang to his feet. Again the change came into his face which they had seen in the mirror. French dashed forward towards him. The professor snarled, stretched about to spring, then suddenly once more stretched out his hands to show that he was helpless and handed to Quest the paper upon which had been writing.

"You have nothing to fear from me," he exclaimed. "Here is my last message to you, Stanford Quest. This is not your triumph, but mine." Quest held up the paper. They all read. The professor's letters were carefully formed, his handwriting perfectly legible:

You have been a clever opponent, Stanford Quest, but even now you are to be cheated. The wisdom of the ages outreaches yours, outreaches it and triumphs.

Quest looked up quickly.

"What the devil does he mean?" he muttered. The professor's arms shot suddenly above his head. Again that strange, animal look convulsed his features. He burst into a loud, unnatural laugh.

"Mean, you fool!" he cried, holding out his wrist, which was slowly turning black. "Poisoned! That is what it means!"

They all stared at him. Quest seized the ink bottle, revealed the false top and laid it down again with a little exclamation. Then, before they could realize it the end came. The professor lay, a crumpled-up heap, upon the floor.

Quest swung round in his chair as French entered the room and held out his left hand.

"Glad to see you, French. Help yourself to a cigar."

"I don't know as I want to smoke this morning just at present, thank you," French replied.

Quest laid down his pen and looked up. French was fidgeting about with his hat in his hand. He was dressed more carefully than usual, but he was obviously ill at ease.

"Nothing wrong, eh?"

"No, there's nothing wrong," French admitted. "I just looked in—"

Quest waited for a moment. Then he crossed his legs and assumed a patient attitude.

"What the deuce did you look in for?" he asked.

"The fact of it is," French explained, "I should like a few words with Miss Laura."

Quest laughed shortly.

"Why on earth couldn't you say so?" he observed. "Never knew you bashful before, inspector. She's up in the laboratory. I'll ring for someone to show you the way."

Quest touched the bell and his new secretary entered almost at once.

"Take Inspector French up into the laboratory," Quest directed. "See you later, French."

"Yes—perhaps—I hope so," the inspector replied nervously.

Quest watched him disappear with a puzzled smile. Then he sat down at his desk, drew a sheet of paper towards him and began to write:

My Dear Inspector:

I am taking this opportunity of letting you know that out of deference to the wishes of the woman I hope soon to marry, I am abandoning the hazardous and nerve-racking profession of criminology for a safer and happier career. You will have, therefore, to find help elsewhere in the future.

With best wishes,
Yours,
STANFORD QUEST.

He left the sheet of paper upon the desk and, ringing the bell, sent for Lenora. She appeared in a few moments and came over to his side.

"What is it, Mr. Quest?" she asked.

He gave her the letter without remark. She read it through and, turning slowly around, looked at him expectantly.

"How's that seem to you?" he asked, reaching out his hand for a cigar.

"Very sensible indeed," she replied.

"It's no sort of life, this, for a married man," Quest declared. "You agree with me there, don't you, Lenora?"

"Yes!" she admitted, a little faintly.

The secretary entered the room, helped Quest on with his coat and handed him his hat.

"If you are quite ready, Lenora."

"Ready" she exclaimed. "Where are we going?"

Quest sighed.

"Fancy having to explain all these things!" he said, taking her arm. "I just want you to understand, Lenora, that I've waited—quite long enough, perhaps," he added, turning to his secretary. "If anyone calls, just say that my wife and I will be back early in the afternoon. And you'd better step upstairs to the laboratory and give my compliments to Inspector French, and say that I hope he and Miss Laura will join us at Delmonico's for luncheon at one o'clock."

"Very good, sir," the man replied.

Lenora's face was suddenly transformed. She passed her arm through Quest's. He stooped and kissed her as he led her towards the door.

"You understand now, don't you?" he whispered, smiling down at her.

"I think so," she admitted, with a little sigh of content.

THE END

1—"Mean, You Fool! Poisoned! That is What It Means."

fore him. These first two sentences were almost in the form of a dedication:

For ten years I have protected my master, Professor Edgar Ashleigh, at the cost of my peace of mind, my happiness, my reputation. This book, even though it be too late to help me, shall clear my reputation.

Quest closed the volume.

"French," he decided, "we must find the professor. Will you have your men search the house and grounds immediately?"

The inspector left the room like a dazed man. They could hear him giving orders outside.

Quest hesitated for a moment. Then he turned it over. All three read again:

Ten years of horror, struggling all the while to keep him from that other self, that thing of bestiality, to keep his horrible secret from the world, to cover up his crimes, even though their shadow should rest upon me. Now Stanford Quest has come. Will this mean discovery?

"Another page," Lenora faltered.

"No more," Quest said. "Don't you see where it is leading us? We have the truth here. Wait!"

He strode hastily to the door. French and one of the plain-clothes men were descending the stairs.

"Well!" Quest asked, breathlessly.

"The professor is not in the house," French reported. "We are going to search the grounds."

Quest returned to the library. Lenora clung to his arm. The diary lay still upon the table.

Quest opened the volume slowly. Again they all read together:

The evil nature is growing stronger every day. He is developing a sort of ferocious cunning to help him in his crimes. He wanders about in the dark, wearing a black velvet suit with holes for his eyes, and leaving only his hands exposed. I have watched him come into a half-darkened room and one can see nothing but the hands and the eyes; sometimes if he closes his eyes, only the hands.

"Mrs. Rheinholdt!" Quest muttered.

The door was suddenly opened and French entered.

"Beaten!" he exclaimed, tersely.

"You haven't found him?" Quest asked.

French shook his head.

"We've searched every room, every cupboard, every scrap of the cellar in the place," he announced. "We've been into every corner of the grounds, searched it all backwards and forwards. There's no sign of the professor."

Quest pocketed the diary.

"You're perfectly certain that he is not in this house or anywhere upon the premises?"

"Certain sure!" French replied.

Quest shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, we'd better get back," he said.

They were on the point of starting, the chauffeur with his hand upon the starting handle, French with the steering wheel of the police car already in his hand. And then the little party seemed suddenly turned to stone. For a few breathless seconds not one of them moved. Out into the clammy night air came the echoes of a hideous, inhuman, blood-curdling scream. Quest was the first to recover himself. He leaped from his seat and rushed back across the empty hall into the study, followed a little way behind by French and the others. An unsuspected panel door which led into the garden stood slightly ajar. The professor, with his hand, on the back of a chair, was starting at the fireplace, shaking as though with some horrible agony, his face distorted, his body curiously hunched up. He seemed suddenly to have dropped his humanity, to have fallen back into the world of some strange creatures. He heard their footsteps, but he did not turn his head. His hands were stretched out in front of him as though to keep away from his sight some hateful object.

"Stop him!" he cried. "Take him away! It's Craig—his spirit! He came to me in the garage, he followed me through the grounds, he mocked at me when I hid in the tree. He's there now, kneeling before the fireplace. Why can't I kill him! He is coming! Stop him, someone!"

No one spoke or moved; no one, indeed, had the once more in the automobiles, in silence they drove without a pause to Quest's rooms. The professor made his way at once to his favorite easy chair, threw off his overcoat and leaned back.

"Quest," he pronounced, "you are the best friend I have in my life! It is you who have rid me of my great burden. Tell me—help me a little with my story—have you read that page from the Medical Journal which Craig has kept locked up all these years?"

"We have all read it," Quest replied.

"It was forged," the professor declared, firmly, "forged by Craig. All the years since he has blackmailed me. I have been his servant and his tool. I have been afraid to speak. At last I am free of him. Thank God!"

"Craig, after all," French muttered.

Lenora stood a little apart with a faint frown upon her forehead. She touched Quest on the shoulder.

"Mr. Quest," she murmured, "he is lying!"

Quest turned his head. His lips scarcely moved.

"What do you mean?" he whispered.

"He is lying!" Lenora insisted. "I tell you there's another creature there, something we don't understand. Let me bring the electro-though transference apparatus; let us read his mind. If I am wrong, I will go down on my knees and beg for forgiveness."

Quest nodded. Lenora hastened to the farther end of the room, snatched the cloth from the instrument and wheeled down the little mirror with its coils and levers. The professor watched her. Slowly his face changed. The benevolence faded away, his teeth for a moment showed in something which was almost a snarl.

"You believe me?" he cried, turning to Quest.

"You are not going to try that horrible thing on me—Professor Lord Ashleigh? I am all broken up. I am not fit for it. Look at my hands, how they shake."

"Professor," Quest said, sternly, "we are surrounded by the shadow of some terrible deeds for which as yet there is no explanation. I do not say that we mistrust you, but I ask you to submit to this test."

"I refuse!" the professor replied, harshly.

"And I insist," Quest muttered.

The professor drew a little breath. He sat back in his chair. His face became white, his lips were drawn closely together. Lenora wheeled up the machine and with deft fingers adjusted the fittings on one side. Quest himself connected it up on the other. The professor sat there like a figure of stone. The silence in the room was so intense that the ticking of the small clock upon the mantelpiece was clearly audible. The very atmosphere seemed charged with the thrill and wonder of it. Never before had Quest met with resistance so complete and immovable. Sternly he concentrated the whole of his will power upon his task. Almost at once there was a change. The professor fell back in the chair. The tense self-control had passed from his features, his lips twitched. Simul-tanously the mirror for a moment was clouded—then slowly a picture upon it gathered outline and substance. There was a jungle, strange, tall trees, and brushwood so thick that it reached to the waists of the two men who were slowly making their way through it. One was the professor; the other a stranger to all of them. Suddenly they stopped. The latter had crept a yard or so ahead, his gun raised to his shoulder, his eyes fixed upon some possible object of pursuit. There was a sudden change in the professor. They saw him seize his gun by the barrel and whirl it above his head. He seemed suddenly to lose his whole identity. He crouched on his haunches, almost like an animal, and sprang at the other's throat. They could almost hear the snarl from his lips as the two men went down together in the undergrowth. The picture faded away.

"Doctor Merrill!" Lenora faltered. "Then it was not wild beasts which killed him?"

Almost immediately figures again appeared in the mirror. There was a small passage which seemed to lead from the back entrance of a house; the professor, with a black mantle, Craig following him, pleading, expostulating. They saw the conservatory for a minute, and then blackness. The professor was leaning against a marble basin. There was nothing to be seen of him but his eyes and hands. They saw him listen for a moment or two in cold, unresponsive silence, then stretch out his hand and push Craig away. The picture glowed and faded and glowed again. Then they saw through the gloom the figure of a Woman approach, a diamond necklace around her neck. They saw the hands steal out and encircle her throat—and then more darkness, silence, obscurity. The mirror was empty once more.

"Mrs. Rheinholdt's jewels!" Lenora cried. "What next? Oh! my God, what next?"

Their eyes ached with the strain, but there was not one of them who could even glance away from the mirror. It was Quest's study which slowly appeared then. The Salvation Army girl was there, talking to the professor. They saw his strange, evil glance. Then the secretary entered and spoke to her. Once more the door opened. The hands were there, stretching and reaching, a paper-weight gripped in the right-hand fingers. They saw it raised above the secretary's head, they saw the other hand take the girl by the throat and push her towards the table. A wild scream broke from Lenora's lips. Quest wavered for a moment. The picture faded out.

"Oh, stop it!" Lenora begged. "Haven't we seen enough? We know the truth now. Stop it or I shall die!"

The criminologist made no reply. His eyes were still fixed upon the professor, who showed some signs of returning consciousness. He was gripping at his collar. He seemed to have difficulty with his breathing. Quest suddenly braced himself. He pushed Lenora back.

"One more," he muttered. "There's something growing in his mind. I can feel it. Wait!"

Again they all turned towards the mirror. They saw the hallway of Ashleigh house, the pictures upon the walls, they could almost feel the quiet silence of night. They saw the professor come stealing down the stairs. He was wearing the black velvet suit with the cowl in his hand. They watched him pause before a certain door, draw on the cowl and disappear. Through the opening they could see Lord Ashleigh asleep in bed, the moonlight streaming through the open window across the counterpane. They saw the professor turn with a strange, horrible look in his face and close the door. Lenora burst into sobs.

"No more!" she shrieked. "No more, or I shall go mad!"

Quest leaned forward and released their victim. The whole atmosphere of the place seemed immediately to change. Lenora drew a long, convulsive breath and sank into a chair. The professor sat up and gazed at them all with the air of a man who has just awakened from a dream. His features relaxed, his mouth once more resolved itself into pleasant and natural lines. He smiled at them pleasantly.

"Have I, by any chance, slept?" he asked. "Oh—"

He never finished his sentence. His eyes fell upon the mirror, the metal band lying by his side. He read the truth in the faces still turned towards him. He rose to his feet. There was another and equally sudden change in his demeanor and tone. He carried himself with the calm dignity of the scientist.

"The end of our struggle, I presume?" he said to Quest, pointing to the metal band. "You will at least admit that I have shown you fine sport."

No one answered him, even Quest had barely yet recovered himself. The professor shrugged his shoulders.

"I recognize, of course," he said, gravely, "that

SCIENCE AND NEAR-SCIENCE UP-TO-DATE

How Women of Old Rome Became Famous as Beauties

HOW the beauty-craving woman of ancient Rome would have liked to live in this day and age of electric vibrators, electric needles, rubber masks and other scientific appliances for bringing back the charms of youth. Investigation shows that she resented advancing age until the last—concealed her wrinkles, helped her figure with judicious padding and replaced lost teeth by artificial ones of ivory, fastened with gold.

The Roman woman needed for her toilet a whole bevy of maids, of whom each was a specialist and had her peculiar skill and duty. Mithy's dressing table, which was often of considerable dimensions, contained pomades and perfumes of various kinds, and a whole armament of boxes, phials, knives, tweezers, brushes, bodkins and scrapers. In the evening, when she betook herself to repose, a cake of fine dough, kneaded with asses' milk, was spread over her face, to render the skin elastic and soft and to preserve its delicate tint.

Asses' milk had a high reputation for its cosmetic powers. The Empress Poppaea, Nero's consort, was the first to bring it into vogue; and when she traveled she was accompanied by a drove of the asses, that she might always have a supply of fresh milk. In the morning this plaster of dough was dry, and it was then slowly and carefully washed off with fresh milk.

Then began the work of the "kosmetai," as these dressing maids were called. The eyebrows were drawn with the pencil in fine arches, the lashes darkened, white and red laid upon the cheeks, the nails trimmed and polished, the hair oiled, perfumed, and the coiffure built up; then shoes of soft, bright leather, or sandals with straps studded with pearls, were put on the feet, and finally the perfumed garments folded about the person.

Last of all came the ornaments for the hair, such as frontlets, diadems, pins, or strings of pearls. The Roman lady prized not only the artistic beauty but also the material value of her jewelry, and did not shrink from displaying a parure that cost millions. The Empress Lollia Paulina, consort of Caligula, appeared at her betrothal ceremony decked in jewelry valued at 40,000,000 sesterces, or $1,548,000. It consisted of emeralds and pearls, the art of cutting diamonds then being unknown.

So now the beauty, having been dressed, perfumed and decked with jewels, sets out to receive the homage of an admiring world. Whatever her destination, her delicate feet must never touch the hard pavement of the streets. The curtained litter stood ready; eight stalwart Cappadocians, her slaves, were waiting to bear their mistress wherever she might order. Taking a fan of feathers in her hand, she moved to her conveyance with the calm and noble gait of a matron and the stately carriage of a great lady, and, reclining on soft cushions, was borne away, leaving a waft of perfume in the air as she passed along.

Hairdressing among the Roman women was an art, and the slave girls intrusted with this important duty were instructed in it by professional teachers. For a long time auburn or golden hair was most esteemed. Hair of a natural blonde was rare among Roman women, but they used a kind of caustic pomade or soap, in which ashes were an ingredient, to give their dark tresses the admired hue. In other words, they were our first "peroxide blondes."

The application of this dye! was not agreeable, but they submitted to it with exemplary patience. The hair was first washed in lye, then rubbed with this dressing and exposed to the rays of the sun. Even this was not always effectual, and then recourse was had to a wig, the blond hair for which was obtained from female captives or imported. Merchants traveled through the Teutonic tribes buying up blond and red hair.

Great care of the hair was also customary among the Greek women—and the men, as well. To have the hair cut, or dressed, the men went to the barber-shops, which abounded in all the Greek cities. As at the present day, the barbers were noted for their loquacity and knew how to entertain a customer with all the latest gossip. Indeed, their shops were often frequented on this account, and became resorts of the idle, the curious and the talkative, who passed there a considerable part of the day.

Greek women often wore false hair, and dyed gray locks black, or faded tresses auburn. To perform this latter feat they used a caustic wash and exposed the hair to the rays of the sun. In this point the men were scarcely behind the women, for they, too, used cosmetics to dye the hair and beard black when they began to turn gray. Dyeing them brown or blonde, though sometimes practiced, was considered effeminate and foppish.

An elegant Greek lady needed for the completion of her toilet no less than fifty different articles, all of which a garrulous writer has enumerated. In the list we find mirrors, jars and phials, unguents and oils, combs and brushes, pencils and colors. She well understood, for that day, how to defend her beauty from the attacks of advancing age, and only yielded to the universal conqueror, Time.

The Roman Woman Needed a Bevy of Maids, All Beauty Specialists, to Aid Her in Making Her Toilet.

Here Are Many Opportunities for Inventors

HERE are a few simple things so badly needed that the Scientific American calls upon inventors to get busy and invent them:

A compartment cigar case to put in the pocket, whose unfiled compartment or compartments may be collapsed without impairing the protection offered to the cigar or cigars contained in the filled compartment.

A ticket holder for holding the price and lot tickets to a coat or other garment, which ticket can be easily applied to and removed and another inserted, all without mutilation of or other injury to the garment.

The lower berth in a sleeping car is stuffy with the windows closed, and if you open the window the cold air is directly on you. It is thought that the riding public would appreciate some deflector or diffusing construction which could be applied to the open window over the usual short-hinged screen and permit the entry of fresh air, at the same time preventing it from blowing directly upon the passenger in the berth.

Some means for effectively preventing the mirror effect in show windows, the effect we all notice in passing such a window in which our image is reflected and the contents of the window are shut out of view. Naturally, the shopkeeper who works for a display in his window resents it not being seen.

President Wilson, who is an ardent golfer and also dependent on his eyeglasses, is reported as saying that he cannot play the game in the rain because of the accumulation of moisture on his glasses, which leads to the suggestion that specially devised glasses or some treatment of the ordinary lens may solve the problem.

'Kill Me or I'll Kill You,' Says the Murderous House Fly

IF YOU saw a man murder a sick baby you would be his eternal enemy. Flies kill many sick babies every year—just how many nobody is able to say. But you consider the fly menace of trivial importance.

Physicians who realize the peril of flies realize that if the average layman could see a fly commit its many crimes just as they do the life of the insect would be short. Therefore a campaign of education to suppress it has been begun.

Here are a few facts about the death-dealing insect accumulated by Dr. G. A. Jordan, health commissioner of St. Louis:

The fly lays its eggs on any organic matter, preferably on stable refuse.

The eggs number about 120 at each laying.

These eggs become fully developed flies in about twelve days.

There are ten to thirteen generations in one season.

One small pile of stable refuse can produce a crop of 500,000 flies.

Neglected garbage and dead fowls and animals also are favorite breeding places.

The descendants of one pair of flies from April to September can amount to 5,698,720,000,000 flies. These are figures of the United States government.

These figures are based on each female fly laying only one batch of eggs when she may lay four batches.

More than 60,000,000 germs have been actually found on the body of one fly.

The new-born fly begins to lay eggs when 2 weeks old.

If all flies descending from one pair should live and breed their descendants would bury the entire earth forty-seven feet deep.

Virtually every fly in a city was born in that city.

The fly by his habits is attracted to and crawls over and feeds upon all kinds of dirt and carries this upon his body and legs.

Germs cause disease just as seeds cause flowers when either is planted in proper soil. Your body or the body of your wife or child may be proper soil.

What is the use of screening your house and then going out and buying food upon which filthy flies have crawled?

All flies will go into a trap if there is no other food about.

A fly seldom travels over two city blocks from his breeding place unless carried on food, the back of a horse or in a conveyance upon which he happens to alight.

Any fermenting or rotting material attracts flies. They also are fond of milk, fish and sweets.

The fly is a voracious feeder, often swallowing one-half its body weight at one meal. It feeds continuously if food be present.

Keep your premises clear of any filth, of exposed garbage or other organic matter, especially manure. See that your neighbor also keeps his premises free.

Put out your fly trap early and keep it working every day. Have fly swatters scattered about your house convenient for use.

This, an Ordinary House Fly, May Carry 1,600,000 Disease Germs About It.

the wire of your screens with a cloth dampened with coal oil. This preserves the wire and keeps the fly away.

The mosquito is responsible for every case of yellow fever and malaria that ever existed, because these two diseases can only be conveyed from man to man through his bite.

We are just commencing to realize the deadly possibilities of the fly in conveying such deadly diseases as typhoid fever, tuberculosis, infantile paralysis and other fatal maladies that have laid millions in their graves.

The fly, eating from the same plate as you are, may be carrying upon his body, feet and legs a million germs.

Wild, dangerous beasts and poisonous snakes are killed on sight. Flies kill more people in one day than wild beasts or snakes ever did. Most of such beasts and snakes never get an opportunity to kill a human being, but any of the millions of flies in every city has such a chance every day.

Germs on the body of a fly multiply faster than the fly does. Patronize the merchant who protects you by keeping the food he sells you screened from flies.

The solution of the fly problem is the destruction of the April fly. Every fly destroyed in April means swarms less in September.

Don't use fly poisons around places where children may come in contact with them. A fly poison is also a child poison. Use traps and swatters.

Where Roller Skates Originated

ROLLER skates were patented and used in France as early as the year 1819, and a few years later an Englishman named Syers patented them and manufactured them in England. Syers' skate consisted of a sandal mounted on five narrow wheels in a single row, so arranged, however, that only two of them could touch the floor at the same time. Several other similar skates were patented in England during the next forty years.

In 1865 Mr. Plympton of Boston patented a roller skate and inaugurated the first system of skating rinks in this country. The first public skating rink was opened at Newport, R. I., in 1868. The skating craze spread from that city all over the country, raging most fiercely on the Pacific coast. There the amusement became so popular that the right to use the Plympton skate in San Francisco alone sold for $25,000.

The craze died and was revived several times since. Its present popularity, especially among children who skate in the street and on the sidewalks, is growing.

Fifteen minutes after flies had been fed on sugar saturated with typhoid bacilli their sugars were found to contain thousands of the living bacilli.

We used to drink the milk from which a fly had been removed. Nowadays one had rather eat the fly, because most of the filth had been removed by his bath and was left in the milk.

The fly does carry disease and he can be eradicated. These are the two cardinal points to be remembered in the warfare now being waged upon him.

Do not leave the fight on the fly to others; do your part.

The common house fly does not bite; he sucks. Before he feeds he puts out a drop of saliva and sucks it back and forth until the substance he is feeding upon is dissolved. Would you like to eat after him?

If the fly carried only filth and not disease that would be enough to condemn him. You see the people living about you in spite of flies, but you forget the legions that are in their graves because of him.

If you saw a fly kill a little child you would be his eternal enemy. Because you cannot see him do this is no reason why you should be any less his enemy.

Just so soon as every one does his part on his own premises, just so soon will there be no more flies. When you fight the fly you are protecting yourself and your family and your neighbor and his family. The place to swat the fly is where he breeds, not where he basks.

How Bullets Telephone Their Location to Physicians

SURGEONS in the military hospitals of France are now making general use of all the most recently invented processes and apparatus for performing operations. Among these are the electro-magnetic and telephonic methods of finding bullets, fragments of shells or other foreign bodies in the human tissues.

The electro-magnet is useless in discovering lead or other metals that are non-magnetic, but whenever there is iron or steel, even in small quantities, in the object to be found it is most effective. Dr. Jacques Boyer describes in La Nature how some of this apparatus is used. Of the electro-magnet he says:

"The apparatus is placed in a frame above the patient. The surgeon, who must operate with nonmagnetic instruments (German silver or 25 per cent nickel steel), easily discovers the presence of the foreign body. The patient feels a characteristic pain and the skin is elevated in the form of a very pointed cone. Then he proceeds easily to the extraction of the fragments of projectiles under the skin or muscles."

The telephonic probe, invented by Professor Alexander Graham Bell, is in constant use today. Dr. Boyer says its beauty is its simplicity, for anyone can improvise such a probe at trifling expense. In its simplest form it consists of an ordinary of any foreign body. The precise localization of such a body depends upon knowledge of the exact points at which a ray from the X-ray machine enters and leaves the body. Among the systems devised by the surgeons that of Dr. Jaeger's is one of the most precise. Suppose he has to find a bullet in a man's head, for example. He places the patient, immobilized in a certain position, before the screen and sets the X-ray bulb at such a height that it casts the shadow of the bullet on the screen. With a pencil having a metallic point that makes it clearly visible on the screen he marks on the patient's skin the point A, at which the ray enters, and the point A1, at which it emerges. Thus he gets the two extremities of a straight line somewhere on which the bullet lies. Then he turns the patient through a certain angle, but keeps the bulb and the screen in the same positions. Again he marks the points telephone receiver with two wires, to the end of one of which a silver spoon is attached and to the other a slender copper or steel rod. Dr. Garel's method of using it is to inject cocaine-adrenalin into the wound, place the spoon in the patient's mouth, hold the receiver to his own ear with his left hand and with his right insert the probe into the wound. The instant it touches the object sought the surgeon hears a click, for an electric current has been formed by the chemical action of the juices of the body upon the two metals.

Dr. Girdner has perfected this apparatus by substituting a head gear with two ear pieces for the single telephone receiver, in order to leave both the operator's hands free.

The X-rays are being used now in all the hospitals for finding the exact situation

This Is the Telephonic Probe Invented by Alexander H. Bell.

B, at which the X-ray enters, and B1, at which it emerges. Thus he gets the two extremities of a second line somewhere on which the bullet lies. The precise situation of the bullet is at the point of intersection of these two lines.

The surgeon now fits a flexible ring of metal around the patient's head at the height of the four points and marks these upon the ring, which represents a section of the patient's head. Removing the ring, he marks its outline upon a sheet of paper and rules straight lines from the points A to A1, and from B to B1. The point at which these lines intersect is where the bullet lies. His knowledge of the anatomy of the skull and brain enables him to decide where most effectually to open the man's head, and how most safely to enter the brain and cut out the bullet.

The same principle is applied to other parts of the body.

PADEREWSKI'S UNFINISHED MASTERPIECE

Mailed Fist of War Cut Short Composition That This World's Genius Believed Would Be His Greatest Work—But War, He Says, Will Eventually Prove a Boon to Art by Simplifying It and Giving It a New Virility

WHEN the last gun is fired in the great conflict of nations now raging in Europe art will be born anew—but not the elaborate art to which we have been accustomed. The effect will be the same as on human life—a tendency toward simplification.

This is the opinion of Ignace Jan Paderewski, the noted pianist, whose visit to America in the interest of devastated Poland indicates that love of country rivals music in the heart of this genius. Paderewski, grieving over the unhappy fate of his land, has not played the piano since the beginning of hostilities, devoting all of his time toward raising funds with which to assist the millions of families that are helpless, hungry and sick.

"All of us, even the poorest, indulged in some luxuries during the days of peace," said Paderewski. "The first accomplishment of the gigantic struggle was to simplify our mode of living. Those who had horses found them commandeered. Automobiles and carriages, too, were requisitioned. The net result was to make people partake of more exercise, especially that of walking, and to eat more wholesome food—in fact, to lead a simple and sane life.

"As art is, after all, the reflection of human life, so will it be simplified. Artists will try to find more accessible forms of expression. I presume it will be a benefit for art itself, which in every one of its branches tended toward excess and exaggeration to the detriment of real thought."

Cancels Engagements to Work for Poland

Paderewski was in England when he learned that the war presaging general hostilities had been declared. He immediately canceled all engagements and returned to his chalet in Switzerland, where he formulated plans to aid unhappy Poland.

While in England Paderewski had begun the composition of what he believed would be his masterpiece. From the start of his career it had been his ambition to compose music rather than to play it. Well-known musicians will tell you that some of his earlier years, were marvelous improvisations, for the magic of his talent supplied what at the start his knowledge lacked.

Paderewski has not supplied a single note to his composition since the war began. "How can I?" he asked, tears filling his eyes. He wasn't ashamed to cry. When you know that in times other than these Paderewski often played seventeen hours a day, a muscular task which the world's strongest men would not care to essay; that he frequently indulged in the strenuous exercise of swimming; that he personally superintended his estate and was even a breeder of horses, you are compelled to readjust the thought that this great artist is effeminate.

Vast Area Is Laid Waste

"How can I?" he repeated, "when my Poland is in misery? War is raging over her soil, sweeping away every sign of civilization, destroying dwellings, devastating fields, gardens and forests, starving and exterminating human beings and animals alike. An area equal in size to the states of New York and Pennsylvania has been laid waste. Two hundred towns, fourteen hundred churches, seven thousand and five hundred villages have been completely ruined.

A total of eighteen million inhabitants, including nearly two million Jews, are continually enduring the horrors of this gigantic struggle. Only very few could flee to the places which are still holding their own against the aggressors; the great majority, almost eleven millions of helpless women and children, homeless peasants, unemployed workmen, the very essence and strength of a nation, have been driven out into the open. Thousands and thousands are hiding among ruins, in woods or in hollows, feeding on roots and on the bark of trees.

"And you ask me why I do not compose! Why I do not play in concert! Can one with true patriotism, true love of country, set his mind on aught else than the heartrending cries of his people, 'Some bread for Polish women and children! Some seed for the Polish farmers!'"

A glance went, instinctively, to his hands. They were as long, as thin, as white, as delicately shaped as an ead.

"Ah, but they are stiff," said Paderewski, divining the meaning of the glance. "And my wrists—they, too, are no longer wrists of steel."

Yearns to Return to Own Work

He said it pitifully, as if he yearned to return to the strenuous life of concert work which Henry T. Fink described so well in the following extract from an article he wrote several years ago:

"Genius involves hard work, in a pianist as in a poet. Ease and finish are the rewards of years of toil. When we know how persistently Paderewski works to perfect his playing we hardly wonder that he shirks the duty of writing letters. His triumphs were not too easily won; he had to practice and study many years to earn them. To this day he will practice ten to twelve hours or more a day when preparing for a concert tour, to keep his fingers supple and his memory reliable. But the secret of his success lies in this, that he practices not merely with his fingers but with the brain too. He once told me that he often lies awake for hours at night, going over his next program mentally, note after note, trying to get at the very essence of every bar.

"This mental practice at night explains the perfection of his art, but it is not good for his health. Indeed, if he ever sins it is against himself and the laws of health. He smokes too many cigars, drinks too much lemonade, loses too much sleep, or sleeps too much in the daytime. For this last habit he is, however, not entirely to blame; for whenever he gives a concert all his faculties are so completely engaged that he is quite exhausted at the end, and unable to go to sleep for hours. His favorite antidote to this artistic insomnia is a game of billiards. Of this game he is passionately fond, and he regards it as a sort of tonic, for, he says, 'If I walk or ride or merely rest I go to thinking all the time, and my nerves get no real rest. But when I play billiards I can forget everything, and the result is mental rest and physical rest combined.'

And to return to this life is Paderewski's wish, but grief forbids.

Were Paderewski's emotions and sentiments less delicately tuned; if he could woo back the perfect contentment of mind which he says is necessary to musical genius, he could aid his country materially by concert work. Following are a few figures covering fourteen consecutive concerts on his second tour of America:

Binghamton, $1,500; New York, $5,000; Boston, $2,364; New Haven, $1,926; New York, $3,000; Rochester, $1,362; Albany, $1,350; Hartford, $1,915; Boston, $2,995; New York, $5,324; Buffalo, $2,050; Philadelphia, $5,324; Brooklyn, $3,102; Boston, $3,999; total, $43,590, or an average of $3,113.

What Concerts Really Pay

The total number of concerts given during this second tour in twenty-six American cities was sixty-seven, and the receipts amounted to $180,000—a sum never before equaled by an instrumental performer. Of this amount about $150,000 was net.

"But it is impossible for me to play until the war is over—rather until my Poland rises from the ashes of her unhappy fate," said the master pianist recently. He rose to prepare for an address to Polish sympathizers in behalf of the General Polish Relief Committee. Paderewski's gift of oratory is second only to his genius as a musician, as shown in the following extract from speech he made:

"We are in sore need of strengthening, of re-inspiration. Blow after blow has fallen upon our stricken race, thunderbolt after thunderbolt; our whole shattered country quivers, not with fear, but with dismay. New forms of life which had to come, which were bound to come, have waked among us on a night of dreadful dreams. The same wind that blew to us a handful of healthy grain has overwhelmed us in a cloud of chaff and siftings; the clear flame kindled by hope of universal justice has reached us fouled by dark and blackening smoke; the light breath of freedom has been borne toward us on choking, deadly waves of poisoned air.

"Our hearts are disarrayed, our minds distorted. We are being taught respect for all that is another's, contempt for all that is our own. We are bidden to love all men, even fratricides, and yet hate our own fathers and brothers should they think otherwise, albeit no less warmly, than ourselves. Our new teachers are stripping us of the last shred of racial instinct, yielding the past in prey to an indefinite future, thrusting the heritage of generations into the clutches of the chaotic ogre whose monstrous form may loom at any minute above the abyss of time.

"The immemorial sanctuary of our race, proof until now against the stoutest foe, is being assailed by brothers who batter at the wall, meaning to use

Grief Over War Stays Hand of Polish Genius

HOW can I compose when my Poland is in misery? War is raging over her soil, sweeping away every sign of civilization, destroying dwellings, devastating fields, gardens and forests, starving and exterminating human beings and animals alike. Only very few could flee to the places which are still holding their own against the aggressors; the great majority, almost eleven millions of helpless women and children, homeless peasants, unemployed workmen, the very essence and strength of a nation, have been driven out into the open. Thousands and thousands are living among ruins, in woods, or in hollows, feeding on roots and on the bark of trees. And you ask me why I do not compose! Why I do not play in concert! Can one with true patriotism, true love of country, set his mind on aught else than the heartrending cries of his people, "Some bread for Polish women and children! Some seed for Polish farmers!"

our scattered stones for the building of new structures—as if these poverty-stricken architects were unable to afford material of their own. The white-winged, undefiled, most holy symbol of our nation is being attacked by croaking rooks and ravens; strange, ill-omened birds of night circle around her, screeching; even her own demented eaglets defy her."

Paderewski Not a Young Man

Paderewski is no longer young—he was born in 1860—and he spends the greater part of the day in conference with the leaders of branch relief societies. Yet no weariness shows in his dignified figure or in his eyes, and he talks with animation. This animation is particularly noticeable when Poland is the subject of conversation. On music, painting, America—on no subjects he talks with interest, but with no great eagerness. But when the wrongs of Poland are mentioned he rises from his chair and speaks with fiery passion.

His masterpiece? "It shall not be born for the time being," says Paderewski. But when it is given to the world who doubts but that it will express yearning maidenhood, grave manhood, tragic and sad old age, light-hearted, joyful youth, love's enfolding softness, action's vigor, valiant and chivalrous strength—all of Poland, for whose tragic fate Paderewski grieves, and which is dearer to his heart than music itself?

Is Love a Disease? If So, What Is the Cure?

IS LOVE a disease? Nearly three hundred theories, the majority of them scientific, exist as to the nature of love. Most are physiological theories. It remained for William Brown, M. A., D. Sc., of King's College, London, to show that the mental phenomena involved—the ideas, thoughts and feelings of lovers—can be to some extent explained by mental causes.

Says Professor Brown: "Whatever may be the theory adopted to explain how it comes about that the ideas and emotions of two people become centered each about the idea of the other, we are still left with the striking resemblance which love presents to certain forms of mental disease. Besides the 'fixed idea' there is the period of 'incubation,' during which the individual does not know what is the matter with him, but feels restless, depressed and 'out of sorts.' There is feebleness of will power, which may, in a few cases, even persist after love has become manifest. Again, there is often a complete change of temperament and character.

"Once more: Some natures seem to be more susceptible to the love fever than others, and would appear to be possessed of a special mental 'diathesis' or disposition, resembling the physical diathesis—the tendency to cancer, scrofula and so forth—so well known to the physician. And the greater proneness to the affliction when in ill health, mental or physical, brings it also into line with physical disease. There are, however, exceptions.

"Again, a love affair of a certain type makes the individual, in many cases, partly or entirely immune to one of a similar nature for the future. Whether it is possible to be in love with more than one person at the same time is a difficult question, but we are, perhaps, a little too ready to answer it in the negative.

"No one will deny that extreme cases abound which are obviously diseased, but these shade off to the so-called normal cases by imperceptible degrees, and the dividing line is not easy to draw. How are we to regard the numerous love tragedies of history? What are we to say of the love murders and suicides which we read about in the newspapers? Can we honestly convince ourselves—those of us who are not entirely inexperienced in the matter—that these cases belong to a class by themselves, and have no closer relation to ordinary love than, say, a cancerous liver to a normal one? Perhaps if a larger proportion of people were insusceptible to the passion—that some such people exist cannot be doubted—we should be more ready to class it among our diseases.

"If disease it is, we must look for its cause in the subconscious, and therefore the ordinary healing method of 'suggestion,' in which the patient's interest is turned in some other direction, is in most cases useless unless helped out by some means of getting down to the subconscious life of the individual. Such means are afforded us by the method of 'psycho-analysis' invented by Professor Freud of Vienna and employed by him and his disciples."

The principle of this method is similar to that of cross-examination as employed in a court of law, except that single words instead of questions are used as the bait. The physician learns of the cause of the disease simultaneously with the patient, and is then able to help the matter by thoroughly "talking the thing out" with him. It has been used with remarkable success, say scientists, in certain forms of mental disease.

"The case of love is very similar," adds Professor Brown. "Love is a disturbance in which the subconscious is largely involved, hence its seeming mysteriousness and irrationality. Not all love affairs need to be cured, but in cases where this is desirable the method of psycho-analysis enables the reason and will power of the lover to be directed upon the irrational emotional tendencies that have gained a footing in his subconsciousness, so that they are seen in their true light and combated accordingly.

"Let us imagine the instance of a pair of lovers where, owing to some internal reasons, jealousy, for instance, love is not flowing smoothly. If these two people be tested separately and independently with the same list of words much information can be obtained as to the nature of their subconscious selves, and also of the more hidden parts of their explicit consciousness.

"Cases of 'hopeless love' could be treated in a similar way, so that indirectly the method might even prove to be a new and efficacious way of curing some cases of consumption, or at least directing the physician's attention to the mental factor which is not infrequently present in these instances. The actual curative treatment, so far as it is mental, would in every case take the form of 'suggestion' and the talking of the matter out with the patient; the psychologist would prescribe measures for directing the flow of the patient's ideas and emotional tendencies into other channels.

Therefore, from the viewpoint of Professor Brown, love in some cases is a disease.

A STEP TOWARD CONFEDERATION.

There had been some noteworthy passages in the reports which Colonel Francis Nicholson sent to the government at home when he was first governor of Virginia (1699); for he studied his duties in those days with wide-open eyes, and had sometimes written of what he saw with a very statesmanlike breadth and insight.

Other things, that he had urged a defensive confederation of the colonies against the French and Indians, under the leadership of Virginia, the most loyal of the colonies. He had made it his business to find out what means of defense and what effective military force there were in the other colonies, particularly in those at the north, conferring with their authorities with regard to these matters in person when he could not get the information he wished by deputy.

The king and his ministers in England saw very clearly, when they read his careful dispatches, that they could not wisely act upon such suggestions yet; but they knew that what Colonel Nicholson thus openly and definitely advised was what must occur to the mind of every thoughtful and observant man who was given a post of authority and guidance in the colonies whether he thought it wise to advise action in the matter or not.

It was evident, indeed, even to some who were not deemed thoughtful at all. Even the heedless, negligent Lord Culpeper, little as he really cared for the government he had been set to conduct, had suggested eight years ago that all questions of war and peace in the colonies should be submitted for final decision to the king, the governor and council of Virginia, where it might be expected that the king's interests would be loyally looked after and safeguarded.

No doubt the colonies would have objected to and resisted such an arrangement with a very hot resentment, and no one in authority in London dreamed for a moment of taking either Lord Culpeper's or Colonel Nicholson's advice in the matter; but it was none the less obvious that the king and his officers must contrive some way, if they could, by which they might use the colonies as a single power against the French in America, if England was indeed to make and keep an empire there.

King James, who leaned upon France as an ally and prayed for such dominion of the Church of Rome, had seen this, it was not likely that William of Orange, who was the arch-enemy of France, and the champion of Protestantism against Rome, would do it.

It was no sooner on the throne than England was plunged into a long eight years' war with the French. And so it happened that the colonies seemed to reap little advantage from the "glorious revolution" which had put out a tyrant and brought in a constitutional king.

They were not likely to be got rid of when once their number had run into the thousands.

FRENCH ACTIVITY.

The French had an advantage, nevertheless, which was not to be despised. They moved as they were ordered to move by an active and watchful government which was in the thick of critical happenings where policies were made, and which meant to cramp the English, if it could not actually get rid of them.

They extended and organized the military power of France as they went; and they were steadily stirring the English about with a chain of posts to keep all the northern and western regions of the great continent for the king of France, from the mouth of the St. Lawrence round about the Gulf of Mexico.

Their movement along the great rivers and the lakes had been very slow at first; but it had quickened to a generation, and was now rapid enough to fix the attention of any man who could hear news and had his eyes abroad upon what was happening about him.

They were still but 100 lonely settlers here when nearly thirty years more had gone by (1688).

It was the quick growth and systematic explorations of the latter part of the century that made the English uneasy.

THE CONFEDERATED IROQUOIS.

This stealthy power which crept so steadily southward and westward toward the coast of the English settlements upon the coast was held at arm's length throughout that quiet age of beginnings, not by the English, but by a power within the forests, the power of the great confederated Iroquois tribes, who made good their mastery between the Hudson and the lakes; the Senecas, Cayugas, Onondagas, Oneidas and Mohawks.

It was a question of territorial aggrandizement, rather, and strategic advantage. Probably there were not more than 12,000 Frenchmen, all told, in America when William became king (1689); whereas his own subjects swarmed there full 200,000 strong, and were multiplying by the tens of thousands from decade to decade.

They advanced their power. The colonists in New England had been uneasy because of their unwelcome neighborhood from the first. Once and again there had been actual collisions and petty warfare. But until William of Orange made England a party to the great war of the Protestant powers against Louis XIV, few men had seen what the struggle between French and English held in store for America.

The English colonies had grown back a little way from the sea, steadily pushed farther and farther into the thick set forests which lay upon the broad valleys and rising slopes of the interior by mere increase of people and drift of enterprise.

Before the seventeenth century was out adventurous English traders had crossed the Alleghenies, had launched their canoes upon the waters of the Ohio, and were fixing their huts here and there within the vast wilderness as men do who mean to stay.

Colonel Dongan, the duke's governor in New York (1685), like many another French and English official, was wont to watch the humors and keep the friendship of the Iroquois, the masters of the northern border, had been quick to see how inconvenient to the English it would be to have French elements "turning all along from our lakes by the back of Virginia and Carolina to the Bay of Mexico."

They had been rivally in trade, and had been these many years, between the men of the English and Dutch colonies and the men of the French for the profitable trade in furs which had its heart at the north; and it was already possible for those who knew the country well to reason right shrewdly of the future, knowing, as they did, that the English gave better goods and dealt more fairly for the furs than the French, and that the many of the Frenchmen who ranged the forests in search of gain themselves preferred to send what they had to Albany for sale.

But, except for a few lonely villages in far-away Maine there was no such close contact between French and English in America.

THE MOVEMENT AGAINST THE FRENCH.

New York felt herself no less concerned than Massachusetts and Maine in the contest with the French, with its inevitable accompaniment of trouble with the Indians; and Jacob Lesler, plebeian and self-constituted governor though he was, had made bold to take the initiative in forming plans for the war.

It was agreed to attempt the conquest of New France. Sir William Phips should lead an expedition by sea against Quebec, and another force should go by land out of Connecticut and New York to attack Montreal, the key to the stronghold, taking their Iroquois allies with them.

got in the northern colonies, at any rate, and in New York. Its memories were bitter into the hearts of the colonists there as with the searings of the burning and desolation it had inflicted in good time, and Virginia accommodated herself with reasonable grace to what was, after all, no ruinous or unprofitable arrangement.

New England, where traders most abounded, found little in the fact that she need complain or seek to escape from: No New England commodity had its route and market prescribed as Virginia tobacco had; New England ships were "English" bottoms no less than ships built in England itself; they could be built as cheaply as the Dutch, and the long coast of the continent was clear for their skippers.

The laws grew inconvenient, there were unwatched harbors enough in which to land and unload without clearance papers. English capital quickened trade as well as supplied shipping for the ocean carriage, and the king's navy made coast and sea safe.

THE BRETHREN OF THE COAST.

In 1699, when the war was over, parliament laid a new restriction upon the colonies, forbidding them to manufacture their own wool for export, even for export from colony to colony.

Good housewives were not to be prevented from weaving their own wool into cloth for the use of their own households; village weavers were not to be forbidden their neighborhood trade; but the woolen weavers of England supplied more than half of all the exports to the colonies, and had no mind to let woolen manufacture spring up in America if parliament could be induced to prohibit it.

It made no great practical difference to the colonies, though it bred a bitter feeling against the right of trade which were not likely to spring up in America. "No man who can have a piece of land of his own, sufficient by his labor to sustain his family in plenty; nor the authorities of Rhode Island, once they became notorious pirates, countenance and assistance. Mr. Edward Randolph, whose business it was to locate the king's revenues, declared in his anger that North Carolina was peopled by nobody but smugglers, runaway servants and pirates."

South Carolina, fortunately, had seen the folly of harboring the outlawed trade, and the king's ministers set about his suppression in the north. Not only had her population by this time been recruited and steadied by the coming in of increasing numbers of law-abiding and thrifty colonists, but she had begun also to produce great crops of rice for whose exportation she could hardly get ships enough and had found that her scrupulous friends, the freebooters, did not scruple to make common cause against buccaneering. Spain and England had been mutually bound since 1670 to abolish it.

Buccaneering abounded most on the coast of America. The lawless business had begun long ago. Spain had provoked it.

Charleston (1670) All the English coast at the south, indeed, was theirs in a sense. They were regulars, not outlaws, when France or Holland or England was at war with Spain, for the great governments did not scruple to give their letters of marque when they needed their assistance at sea.

English buccaniers had helped Sir William Penn take Jamaica for Cromwell in 1655. And when there was no war, the silent, unwatched harbors of the long American seacoast were their favorite places of refuge and repair.

New Providence, England's best anchorage and most convenient port of rendezvous in the Bahamas, became their chief place of welcome and recruiting. The coming of settlers did not disconcert them. It pleased them, rather.

The settlers did not molest them—had secret reasons, as they knew, to be glad to see them. There were the English navigation laws, as well as the Spanish, to be evaded, and the goods they brought in the cheapest because their chief articles were welcome, and no questions were asked.

PENN'S RETURN TO POWER.

RICHARD COOTE, the Earl of Bellomont, came out in 1698 to be governor general of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, specially instructed to stamp out the piracy of the coasts, but he found it no light task.

His predecessor in the government of New York, Benjamin Fletcher, had loved the brethren of the coast very dearly; they had made it to his interest to like them, and the merchants of New York, as of the other seaport towns, were noticeably slow to see the injury of the proscribed business.

Lord Bellomont, however, had seen the folly of harboring the outlawed trade, and the king's ministers set about his suppression in the north. Not only had her population by this time been recruited and steadied by the coming in of increasing numbers of law-abiding and thrifty colonists, but she had begun also to produce great crops of rice for whose exportation she could hardly get ships enough and had found that her scrupulous friends, the freebooters, did not scruple to make common cause against buccaneering. Spain and England had been mutually bound since 1670 to abolish it.

Bitter jealousies and sharp factional differences had sprung up there while affairs were in confusion after the coming of William of Orange, and the two years Mr. Penn spent in their correction (1698-1701) were none too long for the work he had to do. He did it, however, by his characteristic, his fashion, by his frankness, his openheartedness, and his democratic way ever, in a new charter.

One chief difficulty lay in the fact that the lower counties of the Delaware had been under the control of the king's government. For a generation, indeed, as it turned out, she was to have no separate governor of her own. A separate commission issued from the crown suffered no more in New York to be also governor of New Jersey, upon each appointment in the greater province.

But New Jersey kept her own government, nevertheless, and her own way of doing things, directly subject to the larger province, her neighbor, whose governor happened to preside over her affairs.

THINGS CHANGED AS PENN LOOKED ON.

Many things changed and many things gave promise of change in the colonies as Mr. Penn looked on.

In 1700 Virginia had her population enriched by the coming of 700 French Huguenots, under the leadership of the Marquis de la Muce—some of them Waldenses who had moved in exile through Switzerland, Alsace, the low countries, and England ere they found their final home of settlement in Virginia. These refugees had been driven from the terror that had been for all Protestants since the revocation of the Edict of Nantes (1685).

That same year, 1700, Williamsburg, the new Virginia capital of the "Old Dominion," grew very gay with company come in from all the river counties, from neighboring colonies, too, and even from far-off New England, to the first college graduated from the infant college of William and Mary.

The next year (1701) Connecticut, teeming more and more with a thrifty people with its own independent interests and resources, was sending Harvard college at Cambridge, England, away for the convenience of those of her own youth who wished such training as ministers and professional men in general required. At the same age of her own—the college which half a century later she called Yale, because of Elihu Yale's gift of 300 pounds in books and money.

The King William died (1702)—Mary, his queen and consort, being dead these eight years, and Anne became queen.

There was a great change of climate in the public affairs of Europe. In 1701, Louis had put his grandson, Philip of Anjou, on the throne of Spain, a direct violation of his treaty obligations to England, and to the manifest upsetting of the balance of power in Europe. It was a rejoicing that there were no longer any Pyrenees, but only a single, undivided Bourbon power from Flanders to the Straits of Gibraltar; and had decided England, despite his promises made at Ryswick, to declare France's son the rightful heir to the English throne.

Instantly England, Holland and Austria joined together in grand alliance against the French aggression, and for eleven years Italy, Germany and the Netherlands rang with the war of the Spanish succession. The storm had been broken when Anne became queen.

England signaled the war by giving a great general to the world. It was the day of John Churchill, duke of Marlborough, who had been a soldier since he was a boy, and whose children for half a century after the great struggle was over.

The English took Gibraltar (1704), the great fortress of the western end of the Marlbrough led the famous victory of Blenheim (1705)—and Virginians were not likely to forget that it was Colonel Parke, of Virginia, who took the news of the great victory in England.

Marlbrough won at Ramillies and Eugene at Turin (1706). The two great captains triumphed together at Oudenarde (1708) and at Malplaquet (1709). The French were separated, and France was lightened of her overwhelming weight in the balance of power.

But for the colonies in America it was only "Queen Anne's War," full of great suffering and bloodshed, and massacres on the border, expeditions to the north blundered and mismanaged, money and lives spent with little to show for the sacrifice.

The ministers at home had made no provision for the American defense against hostilities. There had been warnings enough, and appeals of deep urgency, sent out of the colonies. Every observant man of affairs there saw what must come. But warnings and appeals had not been heeded.

Lord Bellomont, that self-respecting gentleman and watchful governor, had told the ministers at home very plainly that there ought to be a line of frontier posts at the north, with soldiers for colonists, and that simply to pursue the Indians once and again to the depths of the forests was as useless as to pursue birds that are on the wing.

The English prisoner in the hands of the French had sent word what he heard they meant to do for the extension of their boundaries and their power. The deputy governor of Pennsylvania, Mr. Penn, looking near at hand, had advised that the colonists be drawn together in intercourse and interest by a common coinage, a common rule of citizenship, a common system of justice, and by other means, had advised that the colonists be drawn together in intercourse and interest by a common coinage, a common rule of citizenship, a common system of justice, and by other means, had advised that the colonists be drawn together in intercourse and interest by a common coinage, a common rule of citizenship, a common system of justice, and by other means.

But nothing had been done. (Continued next week.)

BROKEN COIN

The finding of The Broken Coin in an old Curiosity Shop in New York is the starting point of a startling galaxy of adventures of pretty Kitty Gray, the clever girl reporter. The Broken Coin has the earmarks of a news story to Kitty but it changes the whole trend of her life. The story of The Broken Coin is the latest product of that master writer, author of "The Mississippi Bubble," "54-40 or Fight," "The Law of the Land," "John Rawn," "The Purchase Price," and many other popular stories.

Emerson Hough

Mr. Hough has attained a place in the foremost ranks of American writers of fiction of the present day. Many others of our popular authors are more prolific, but few of them have written more books that will stand the test of time.

The Broken Coin is the greatest story Mr. Hough has ever written. It is a wonderful story of love and romance leading to a throne, written in an absorbing series of fascinating chapters throbbing with real red-blood interest without the slightest tinge of sensationalism or unreal situations; in fact, a clean-cut romance that you will enjoy to the last line.

Romance of a Machinist Who May Become a Rear Admiral

By A. R. Parkhurst, Jr.

Position.—A place second to none in the social scale.

Romance.—The right to woo and win the girl in this world is deemed worth while and one who will stand loyally at his side in the later years of his fight to win life's battle.

All these things, and more, have been crowded into the life of Mr. Louis Randolph Ford, Ensign, United States Navy, who perhaps before these lines have appeared in print will have been promoted to the rank of lieutenant.

At the recent commencement exercises of Columbia University Ensign Ford received the degree of Master of Arts. That in itself was enough to create a ripple of interest, inasmuch as the general but erroneous impression prevails that when a youth emerges from the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, he is through with his studies, for the time being at least, and from then on has only to don gold braid, much gold lace, buckle on his sword, pace the quarterdeck and win a wealthy wife. But none of these day dreams was ever permitted to enter into the reckoning of Mr. Ford. In the very first place he was not fortunate enough, when a barefooted youngster of far away Texas, to obtain an appointment to the United States Naval Academy as a cadet. True, he had wanted to enter the navy ever since he was old enough to turn the leaves of the books depicting the valiant deeds of John Paul Jones, Decatur, Farragut, Porter and all the other heroes of the seven seas. But if this ambition was to be fulfilled only an indomitable will, pluck, no end of hard work and the expenditure of much gray matter could make it possible.

Mr. Ford adheres to that ironclad rule which most of our officers of the navy and army have laid down for themselves—don't talk for publication. None of the facts gathered here could be drawn from Mr. Ford, who courteously but modestly remarked:—"In the first place, I don't care to see my name in print; in the second place, under no circumstances will I talk for publication; and, third but not last, I don't think any gentleman, especially an officer in the United States service, care to prattle about himself. I not only don't care to but I don't intend to."

Then he snapped that firm, strong jaw of his and shut up as tightly as an oyster, and nothing could induce him to utter another word on the subject.

But the lord and master Mr. Ford has sworn to honor, obey and protect—Uncle Sam—is not quite so modest when it comes to discussing the achievements of his loyal sons. He keeps a very well tabulated record of all that those who enter his service have done and, further, what he expects them to do. It is no violation of his confidence to say right here that he expects great things of Mr. Ford, and when he elevated him to the dignity of an officer in his navy he did so with a full knowledge of this young man's capabilities and the odds he had overcome to make himself worthy of such an honor.

Here are the facts I gleaned from the department files, and here they are set before the reader without the least embellishment:—

Louis Randolph Ford was born at Jasper, Texas, on February 3, 1883. That, of course, makes him just thirty-two years old. He was one of seven children—three girls and four boys. When he was four years old his parents removed to Orange, Texas, a little lumbering town remarkable only for a very well equipped and extensive machine shop. Louis attended the public schools of Orange and graduated when fourteen years old. Conditions in his family were such that a college course was out of the question, and as there wasn't sufficient influence at hand to induce the Representative of that Congressional district to give young Ford an appointment to Annapolis there was only one thing left for the boy—and that was to go to work.

Louis Ford had been a deep and discriminating reader from earliest youth. His taste ran to works of a historical nature, although for fiction he invariably turned to dashing tales of the sea. A commission in the navy seeming unobtainable by the surest and easiest route, young Ford flatly announced that the day was not far distant when he would make Uncle Sam accept him as one of his officers. Naturally such a prophecy met with jeers, for it hasn't been so many years back that mere mention of rising from the ranks of the navy to a full fledged officer was regarded as next to impossible. But Ford kept his own counsel and cast about for a job.

His love of the water directed his steps to the piers of the boats that piled up and down the Sabine river, on whose banks Orange was pitched, and it was not long before young Ford got a job aboard one of the tugboats touching that little port. For three years he continued at this work, and then applied at the machine shop of his home town for a berth as an apprentice machinist. It was understood that this apprenticeship was to extend over a period of four years, but the youth showed such a marked aptitude for mechanics of all sorts that after two years in the shops he was doing the work of a full fledged machinist.

At about this time one of the travelling recruiting squads that the Navy Department at that time sent through the country, a practice not now in vogue, came to Houston, Texas, and, seeing the alluring advertisements that appeared in the newspapers, Ford went to Houston and after satisfying himself that there was a chance for advancement from the ranks, provided the young recruit did his duty, he decided to enlist. He was sent to the Mare Island Navy Yard, at San Francisco, as a machinist of the second class, his pay being fixed at $40 a month. He was soon

ENSIGN
LOUIS RANDOLPH FORD.

MRS. LOUIS RANDOLPH FORD.
(GENEVIEVE CATHERINE KALT OF SOUTH NORWALK, CONN.)

When Mr. Ford went to New York on his first leave of absence as an officer he renewed acquaintance with close friends of his family he had known in Texas during his youth. Through them he received an invitation to a reception and dance to be given by some mutual friend living in Riverside Drive. It was at this dance he met Miss Genevieve Catherine Kalt, daughter of Mrs. Catherine Kalt, formerly of South Norwalk, Conn., but now of New York city. It was evident to all that it was love at first sight between the young naval officer and the girl with whom he danced all evening. Both were good dancers, and it was remarked by their friends that nearly all the invitations the two accepted for the ensuing fortnight were at functions where dancing was indulged in. The courtship was ardent, for in less than three months their engagement was announced.

They were married on New Year's Eve, 1914, the wedding being attended by many well known New York families and navy people. With his bride he went to Texas to spend his honeymoon and there present to his parents the first and only girl he had ever paid serious attention to since the day he announced to his family:—"I have no time for play or girls. I intend to win a commission in the United States Navy, and I guess that is a big enough job for any youngster who hasn't influence or pull to rely upon."

Ensign Ford is now attached to the New York Navy Yard, where he is to engage in further study along the line he pursued at the university with the purpose of eventually devoting himself to the organization and management of shops in navy yards. The degree conferred upon the young machinist at Columbia University was all the more remarkable inasmuch as he had never taken the full course of the Naval Academy, and in consequence had never enjoyed the distinction of receiving his degree of A. B. But the faculty at the university decided that since he had taken and successfully passed an examination which earned him the rank of ensign he was, therefore, on an equal footing with other officers taking the same course who had entered the Naval Academy as cadets and graduated. Other enlisted men had been promoted to a commission, but young Ford was the first to continue on his upward course and become eligible for a degree at the hands of a university.

A day or two after receiving his degree at Columbia Ensign Ford was asked if his brother officers, men who had graduated from Annapolis, had been cordial toward him.

"No man could have been treated with more consideration and kindness than I have been since receiving my commission. The officers with whom I have been so fortunate to be associated all have been gentlemen of the finest type. The warm hand of fellowship was extended to me at the very outset of my career, and I owe a great deal to these same men. They have helped me over many a rough place, and as for snobbishness—well, if such a thing exists it must be outside the navy, for I have never seen the slightest indication of it."

It might be interesting to add, now that Mr. William Jennings Bryan is so much in the limelight, that Mr. Ford's brother, John D. Ford, for many years has been editor of the Timpan (Texas) Times. He was elected Mayor of Timpan and was several times re-elected. He was an ardent Bryan supporter, and each time Mr. Bryan ran for office Mr. Ford contributed his entire salary as Mayor to the Bryan campaign fund. Mr. Ford's salary as Mayor of Timpan is one dollar per annum.

transferred to the receiving ship that was being outfitted Wyoming, and a little later was attached to the monitor Wyoming, which was just being placed in commission. That vessel has since been rechristened the Cheyenne. After working on board this ship for three months Ford was advanced to the grade of machinist of the first class, with an increase of $15 a month in pay. This advancement came to him through the personal recommendations of the chief engineer to the captain in charge of the vessel, and the promotion was looked upon by his fellow machinists as one of the most rapid that any enlisted man had won.

From then Ford, the machinist, got the sea experience he had so long dreamed of. He was at Panama when the revolution started there, and was in those waters about nine months. Then he returned to the Puget Sound Navy Yard, and on the way from Panama made application for examination as a warrant machinist, he having been made a machinist mate while at Panama. Ford had no sooner arrived at the Puget Sound yard than he received notice that the department had appointed an examining board on engineering subjects before which he must appear. He took the examination and returned to his work in the yard's shops. His papers had been forwarded to Washington, and while waiting to hear the outcome of the examination he was ordered to report to Mare Island Navy Yard to stand an examination for the grade of chief machinist, a rank to which all warrant officers are advanced after six years of service. He passed this examination with flying colors, and after being assigned to the West Virginia he was transferred to Charleston, S. C., where he was assigned to the post of senior engineer officer on board the Baltimore.

All this time Ford had never lost sight of the fact that he intended to continue his meteoric flight through the various grades of non-commissioned rank until he became eligible for promotion to the commissioned grade. He wanted to be an ensign, which meant that a chasm yawned before him which his fellows among the warrant officers tried to convince him could not be bridged. But Ford would not be convinced. He had won his way thus far against terrific odds, and he saw no reason why he should not continue to advance. Accordingly, he made application for permission to stand an examination for an ensign's commission.

In July, 1912, Ford was ordered to Washington for examination. To say that the trip meant more to the Texas boy than he had ever taken expresses it but mildly. But he was confident from the outset and had no idea that he would fail to pass whatever test he was required to undergo. The grilling the young machinist went through lasted for sixteen days. At its expiration he was notified that he could return to his ship, the Baltimore, where he would receive word of the outcome of the examination.

His suspense was not of long duration, for in a few days he was officially notified that he had passed his examination with the highest marks ever made by a warrant officer. He was a full fledged officer of Uncle Sam's navy at last—the goal he had set for himself as a barefoot boy in Texas. He was ordered to proceed without delay to Mare Island Navy Yard, where his commission would be forwarded. In the meantime he was to go aboard the Vicksburg and report for duty. But these orders were countermanded before they could become effective, for while en route Ensign Ford was ordered to proceed to San Diego and report on board the San Francisco, whither his commission would be sent. In sixteen days it came. Ensign Ford was soon transferred to the Iris,

Statement Made by Rear Admiral Evans on Day He Retired

Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans on the day of his retirement from the United States Navy, August 19, 1908, while at Lake Mohonk, in the course of an interview, said:—

"It has always been my policy to give the young Americans under my command every opportunity for advancement. I am proud of the fact that there are many young Americans holding commissions in the navy who won them fairly, and some of them are warrant officers performing valiant service for their country. MY EXPERIENCE HAS

BEEN THAT IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO KEEP DOWN AN AMERICAN BOY IF HE DESIRES TO ADVANCE HIMSELF. THERE IS NO MORE PROMISING FIELD FOR SUCH LADS AT PRESENT THAN THE UNITED STATES NAVY."

WALK, WALK, WALK! Says Uncle Sam.

Government warns that we are becoming a sedentary nation and that the death rate before the age of forty has materially increased. If you take no other form of exercise you should walk five miles a day.

By DELIA AUSTRIAN.

WALK, walk, walk," says Uncle Sam in a recent government bulletin. This comes not merely as a word of warning to the American men and women; it is almost an imperative command.

You must walk if you would maintain your health and prolong your life.

You may be surprised to learn that the death rate after the age of 40 is rapidly on the increase, notwithstanding the fact that the average length of life has been increased ten or fifteen years in the last twenty-five years. This is being caused, says our official health bureau, by our increased sedentary practices, which lead to hardening of the arteries, high blood pressure and other diseases of degeneration.

True, our mode of living as a great deal more sanitary than it was thirty years ago and greater protection has been secured against communicable diseases. Counteracting these measures, however, is the fact that most of us are occupied with more sedentary work than were our parents and grandparents. Either we work at home or in the office from seven to ten hours a day. The average worker feels that because he is interested in his work little harm comes from it. This hypothesis is incorrect. The scientific facts are that the muscles, arteries and other organs as a result of sedentary occupation are weakening.

You should be instinctively fond of walking, because it is the most primitive and therefore the most natural exercise. Long before there were motor cars, trains or carriages men and women walked. Their only other means of conveyance were horses, and riding is not such a bad exercise in itself.

Our ancestors, the cave man and cave woman, had no tennis, golf, no rowing matches. Their only sport was walking and swimming, though occasionally they may have used the skull and bone for hockey or a similar game.

Those who do not have to walk now because they have motor cars and street cars at their command should take as much exercise as possible.

If you walk erectly the upper muscles of your body are energized, while the lower extremities are alternately contracted and relaxed. The muscles of the chest are also contracted and strengthened. In walking you increase your respiratory action and this actually tends to increase as well as facilitate the burning up of poisonous tissues.

By exchanging pure air for foul air the appetite is increased, digestion promoted and the flow of the blood to the brain is stimulated. This means not better physical condition alone but a better quality of mental work.

swinging, chest well expanded, abdominal muscles rotund, the spinal curve well maintained—in fact, the whole body thoroughly energized.

"It must be remembered that this represents the sum total of exercise for one day. Now, if one does housework, walks to and from the office, climbs stairs or engages in any other line of work calling into use various muscles of the body—this work must be subtracted from the six-mile walk. This walk is suggested as representing an agreeable form of exercise.

"Walking on a level surface at the rate of three miles an hour represents an amount of physical work equal to lifting one-twentieth of the body weight through the distance walked; that is, a man weighing 150 pounds walking six miles has done physical work equivalent to transporting seven and one half pounds over the distance walked—six miles.

"Stair climbing can be made to serve the place of mountain climbing. In order to perform the exercise of lifting 150 tons one foot high (the daily required exercise for the average healthy person—equivalent to walking six miles), it would be necessary to go up and down an ordinary flight of stairs 150 times during the day.

"A good form of indoor exercise is 'running in place'—such as taught at the gymnasium. 'Heel raising' is another good form of exercise. Rising on the toes (raising heel two inches each time) fifteen hundred times is equal to walking one mile, or (in case of person weighing 200 pounds) lifting twenty-five tons one foot high.

"Some hearty individuals when threatened with a cold are able to abort it by taking a long walk in the open air. This is a good idea, provided there is no fever and the cold is taken early. In the case of weakened or only moderately strong persons, and where the cold has had a good start, it would certainly be unwise to attempt to break it up by such measures."

Coach Stagg Says "Walk More, Ride Less"

ALONZO STAGG, professor and director of departments of physical culture and athletics at the University of Chicago, approves of the statement made by the public health service and by Dr. Sedler. As he puts it, "Walk more and ride less. Frown on the auto car no less than the street car when you have a chance to walk. Walking is decidedly good; it is the best general exercise. It gives movements to all the parts of the body except the arms. If you hold yourself straight you give plenty of play to the muscles of the back. The propelling movement gives play to the abdominal and leg muscles. If you swing the arms with vigor you give play to the muscles of the arm, the superficial muscles of the thorax and the intercostal muscles.

"By inhaling properly you put plenty of fresh air into the lungs to drive out the impure air, and develop the chest. The muscles of the diaphragm are given their share of exercise and grow strong. The average person should find his even gait in walking and try to keep it. A certain amount of running is good, because it contracts the abdominal muscles, develops the muscles of the legs and brings the poisonous secretions to the surface. For this reason it is a good form of exercise for the man or woman wanting to reduce.

"Young children should do their share of walking and running every day. These are their chief exercises and they develop the muscles of the arms and legs as well as those of the chest. As they grow older they commence to have their games and their indoor sports. If they go in for baseball and football, tennis, golf and swimming they need to walk and run less.

"Though they do all this they should be made to walk to and from school. Under no circumstances should they be allowed to use an auto car or street car instead of their two legs. It is a painful sight these days to see the children of the rich riding to and from school in auto cars and the children of the middle classes in street cars. One reason why golf is such a splendid exercise is it forces men and women to walk over a great area without any conscious effort. If you can play eighteen holes of golf and feel refreshed you ought to get the same pleasure and recreation from a five-mile walk.

"Walking is a splendid exercise for old people, because it keeps the blood quickened and the muscles relaxed without putting any special strain on the vital organs of the body. You will get benefit from walking at all times.

"The early morning is a very good time to walk, because it stimulates the body. It makes you wide awake and creates a feeling of hunger. Walking in the evening is also good if done in moderation, because it relaxes and refreshes the tired muscles and the contracted parts of the body. If you cannot get up enough enthusiasm to do your share of walking alone join a walking club. Others will teach you to get pleasure from walking if you cannot learn this alone."

If you have ever visited the foremost sanitariums and hospitals in this country and Europe you have found out that physicians are making more and more use of exercise, fresh air and water. When it

How to Walk Correctly

TO GET the most from walking, you should learn to walk erectly. Be sure to hold your chest, and head high. Keep your arms to your side or let them swing modestly.

You should have an energized carriage and the right way to get it is to get your movement from the hips. Walk with your legs, not by a swing or swaying of the whole body.

Step into the length and do not turn the knees out so much. See how smoothly you can glide along and take natural deep breaths as you move.

This will give you the feeling that you are being wafted through space instead of laboriously treading on hard earth.

Tip the upper part of your body slightly forward to partly cover your feet. Try to forget your feet and create a desire to attract attention to your head instead.

Strike down with the heel, but let the weight slip to the outer and fore part of the foot and this will break the jar on the sole of the foot and lessen the strain on the arch.

If you are not a walking enthusiast, begin your regime gradually. Start to cover a mile, then two and gradually work up to five or six. Any man or woman should be able to walk five miles and even six or eight without feeling any bad effects.

comes to the treating of lung diseases and nervous troubles they use fresh air and exercise more than anything else. A part of the treatment is to rest in the open, to work and walk in the open. Take a hint from these patients and keep well by walking.

Dr. William S. Sadler

DR. WILLIAM S. SADLER, one of America's leading nerve specialists, is a firm believer in walking, and plenty of it. He says:

"Walking is a great aid in the management of nervousness. It improves the circulation, not to mention the digestion. It helps the neurotic to sweep away his mental cobwebs. I have found walking especially helpful in case it can be carried on in groups—in congenial company, but in the lesser forms of neurosis even the lone cross-country walk is found diverting, if it can be indulged in in the spirit of James Whitcomb Riley's 'A Country Pathway'—"

Advocate of Walking

*I come upon it suddenly, alone—
A little pathway winding in the woods
That fringes the roadside, and with dreams
My own*

I wander as it leads Full wistfully along the slender way, Through summer sun of frolicked shades and shine,

*I take the path that leads me as it may—
Its every choice is mine.*

*And though it needs must lure me mile on mile
Out of the public highway, still I go,
My thoughts, for in advance in Indian file,
Assure me even so.*

Why Uncle Sam Pays $157,325,160 in Pensions

THERE is no country which carries so large a pension list in proportion to the size of its army as the United States. The pension system was started early in the life of our nation and was enlarged tremendously by the civil war and the late Spanish-American war.

In the year 1898, immediately following the close of the civil war, the appropriation by Congress for the payment of pensions amounted to a little more than $15,000,000. In 1911, or forty-five years later, the amount paid out on account was $157,325,160.35. Annual pension payments on account of the civil war have increased ten fold fifty years after the close of the war and continue on an ascending scale. Since the close of the war in 1865 pension payments on account of service in that war aggregate upward of $4,000,000,000.

When pensions were first provided for in this country they were supposed to reach the real veterans who were disabled through wounds or disease. As years went by the resourcefulness of the pension list was increased to include the deserter, so long as he did not leave his command while in the presence of the enemy.

The short Spanish-American war swelled our pension list greatly. The report of the commissioner of pensions shows that between July, 1861, and June 13, 1898, invalid pensions were allowed under the general law to 666,265 volunteers, and under the act of June 27, 1890, to 451,531, a total of 1,007,796. During the period from July 1, 1861, to Jan. 1, 1901, pensions were allowed to 80,266 regulars, including the wounded and invalided men of more than thirty years of almost constant Indian warfare.

To make the comparison intelligible, the total number of volunteers who enlisted in the civil war, reduced to a basis of three years' service, is 2,324,516 men. The total number of men on the rolls of the regular army during the whole period from 1861 to 1901 is 577,000, including reenlistments.

Up to June 30, 1900, 1,007,796 volunteers out of 2,324,516 were in receipt of pensions, while only 30,266 regulars out of 577,000 were recipients of such bounty. This shows that the regulars have been singularly free in pension seeking, and the volunteers have not.

The increase of expense for short-term volunteers arises not only from pensions but from waste and injury of public property. Washington observed such conditions at the very beginning of the revolutionary war, when he wrote from Harlem Heights on Sept. 24, 1776, the following:

"It becomes evident to me that as this contest is not likely to be the work of a day, as the war must be carried on systematically, and to do it you must have good officers, there are no possible means to obtain them but by establishing your army upon a permanent footing, and giving your officers good pay."

Using a Broad Casement and a Big Fireplace to Add Cheer and Comfort to the Entire House

By MME. MAISON.
WITH a broad casement window and a good big fireplace most any room may be made attractive and comfortable. It is now quite the thing to combine the use of two rooms into one big one, like a living and dining room, a hall and living room, etc.

This may be a very happy combination if care is taken in selecting the furniture so that all appearance of overcrowding is avoided. The wall may be paneled with strips of molding which is used as a picture molding, allowing a drop in the ceiling if the walls are nine feet in height. Have the fireplace extend to the ceiling with a rather high mantel shelf of wood. Beams if not too many or too heavy for the size of the room are good in this type of room.

If the size of the room is from 12 by 16 feet two beams will be sufficient. Stain the same as the woodwork. A few old pieces of pewter or rare old china plates may stand on the mantel and a grandfather's clock will be perfectly at home in the corner near by, with a table at the end of the window seat built under the casement window and ample enough to permit of a ruffled cushion and pillows so it may be used as a couch to rest one's weary self when so inclined.

I remember a dear old lady once saying "It is so handy to have a place where one can top down and not spoil the bed," so an essential in a living-room is some such place, and I always advocate pillows and cushions to be made of washable fabrics.

A valance and side draperies are all that is necessary at the windows if the view outside is a lovely one and no neighbors near enough to make close screening a necessity. It is a delight to frame our outdoor pictures by stindows as free from curtains as possible, especially in the summertime.

A rush bottomed, high-backed chair may invite one to the fireside, which may have black andirons if brass are too expensive—in fact, if the bricks used are dark red I rather like the black fire things best.

A Combination Living and Dining Room.

Please advise me in regard to furnishings for a small dining-room to be used as a sitting-room. Would a rug, chairs, dining table, buffet and refrigerator be appropriate or too much?

REPLY.
All the articles mentioned are quite necessary in a combination sitting-room and dining-room except the refrigerator. You will have to place that in the kitchen or in a place especially built for it where it may be filled from the outside.

Napkins to Match.
I have come to you again for advice. This time I have a lunch cloth, round, forty-eight inches, the size of my table, then it has heavy hand-made lace about seven inches wide around it. This hangs down just from the edge of the table. I am going to put a large initial on it. How large shall I make it? I have plenty left for luncheon napkins. How can I finish them to match the lunch cloth?

I thought of scalloping the edge and putting a small initial in the corner. Would that be all right, or can you think of a prettier way? How large will the napkins be? A READER.

You may use a letter four or five inches high on the cloth. Use the same style of letter on the napkins, only smaller. You may make them twenty-two, twenty, eighteen or sixteen inches square and finish with a narrow edge of shiny lace or the scalloping. Both ways are equally good.

Cabbage Salad—Take half a head of cabbage shred very fine and plunge into cold water until crisp. Drain well and put in a bowl. Make a good salad dressing of half cupful of cream. Add a tablespoonful sugar and one teaspoonful salt. If you like a sour flavor, put in a teaspoonful of vinegar.

Rice Croquettes With Cheese Sauce—Boil a cupful of rice in two and a half cupfuls of milk. If not tender, add more milk. Season with two tablespoonfuls of butter, a pinch of salt, a dash of paprika and mix with two beaten egg yolks and chill. When cold and stiffened mold into cones, balls or cylinder forms. Dip in crumbs, then in egg whites and in crumbs again. Cook the sauce well before adding the cheese. Serve as soon as it is melted.

Carrots—Peel and cut in rounds, in cubes or long strips. Cook in boiling salted water until tender. Serve with cream sauce or toss the carrots in the following mixture. For two cupfuls of the cut carrots take one tablespoonful sugar, lemon juice, a little salt and pepper. Pour into a saucepan and shake till the mixture is absorbed. Carrots and peas served together are appetizing.

How to Make a Wooden Wedding Much More Interesting Than Its Commonplace Name Would Indicate

By DAME CURTSEY.

THE seventh wedding anniversary is celebrated by the wooden wedding, and it can be made a much more enjoyable affair than the name indicates. For the table centerpiece have a large cake, if it is placed on a fern-decorated box to raise it up the effect will be more pleasing. On the top put a doll dressed as "Little Bo-Peep" and a lot of tiny woolly sheep, which may be purchased for a penny apiece at a toy shop. At each place, or as souvenirs for the guests, have a little sheep with a bell on a ribbon around the neck.

For amusement prepare a number of cards about seven by five inches in size, have needles and various colored worsteds ready. Tell the guests to prick any design they wish in the card and then work it with the wool after the kindergarten method. Allow a half hour for this and then collect the finished creations and pin them up to be judged after the artists have signed their names. Award a prize for the best and poorest. After the refreshments pass a huge ball of yarn to a person whom you know to be a good story teller and request him or her to spin a yarn as the ball is unwound until a package is reached, then that person appropriates the "find," passes the ball to the next person, who continues the story where it was left off until he, too, is stopped by an obstacle in the ball. There are any number of small favors that may be used in making this ball.

Tiny mutton pies may form a feature of this entertainment, as they are suggestive of "wool." Any of the essays by Charles or Mary Lamb would be suitable for prizes also a drawing or a framed sketch of the ever adorable "Mary" and her immortal lamb.

Novel Shower Scheme.

This is a pretty way to present the gifts to a bride at a shower if the articles are small, like hosiery or handkerchiefs. Make a Jack Horner pie in the colors the hostess wishes to have and when dessert time comes (if the occasion is a luncheon) ask each guest to pull her ribbon, and as the package is forthcoming each one has some excuse to find like "This piece of pie is too large. Please hand it to Miss B— (the honored guest). My piece is very much too small. Just pass it to Miss B—." This makes loads of fun and opening the parcels adds zest to the occasion. It is well to have an appropriate sentiment written on the donor's card to be read aloud. Handkerchiefs and stockings may be rolled and concealed in tissue paper with fringed ends and so look like the snapping motto favors so popular at all social functions, the ribbons tied around each one and all put within the pie.

I have been a reader of your department in the paper every Sunday, so I am opening to you for advice. I am a girl of almost 17 years and when I am introduced to anyone should I always rise and should I always offer my hand? SEVENTEEN.

It is polite to rise when being presented, if to an older person I consider it the proper thing to offer one's hand. In fact, I am very old-fashioned about many things and I think the extended hand is symbolic of courtesy always especially in one's own home.

Questions From the Juniors.

The Juniors are going to give a reception for the Seniors, and intend to have everything Japanese in the refreshment-room. Now, we would like to carry this scheme out also in the refreshments. Can you suggest some? Do you know of a Japanese game that we could play?

Thanks very much for your former help to us. JUNIOR.

Cherry ice or sherbet would be delicious, with a candied cherry on the top of each portion. You know cherry blossom time is a great festival in Japan. Serve with small frosted cakes or you can get, in large cities, real Japanese wafers made from rice meal. They are packed in small boxes and are easily transported. Our neighbors in the flowery kingdom are very fond of ball games, but I do not know any well enough to describe them.

A Long Vacation for Mother Without Leaving Her Own Home

By DOROTHY DOLAN.

PERHAPS you have never stopped to consider your greatest asset as a housekeeper. Since this question is being so forcibly presented you doubtless will either say that good cooking or skill in other lines associated with housekeeping is your greatest asset. Since you are a capable and conscientious housekeeper it is only natural for you to feel that way.

The truth of the matter is that your health is your chief asset and should be your chief consideration. You are the center of your home and everything that goes on in your home gravitates about you. Your housekeeping has run so smoothly through the winter, there has been so much sunshine and so little unhappiness within the quarters of those walls, that neither your husband nor children begin to realize how much planning and thinking it has taken to keep the wheels of the machine running so easily and smoothly.

You yourself have been so busy supplying their material and social needs that you rarely realize how much energy you have expended in that direction. It is only since the fine summer weather has made its appearance that you feel tired, and that you are working with your nerves instead of with your muscles.

If you are to continue of service to your family and friends you must take this tired feeling and jaded nerves as a word of warning. Experience, courage and brain are only a part. Good health and steady nerves must be there if you are to continue in even measure day after day.

You are surprised to discover that much of the cooking and the washing are now a burden after you have looked after the children and the household. This means you have come to a point where you should rest. If you feel you do not want to close up your house and take the children away for the summer you must get your vacation at home.

No, not for a week or ten days. This is not nearly enough for a hard-working wife and mother. You must have a good, long rest of four weeks and longer if you wish. This means that you are to have your breakfast in bed, served on a dainty tray, as though you were a semi-invalid or a lady of leisure, at least.

Your husband can prepare the morning meal, and if he has no knowledge of cooking you should take a maid to substitute for you while you are resting if your means will permit it.

It will come hard for you to be inactive for a week at least and then you will begin to enjoy the novelty of the situation. If you are to get the full benefit of this rest you must take the whole day or as much of it as you like for yourself.

Instead of tidying up the house, starting the luncheon and making up the bedrooms, your temporary housekeeper is to do this for you. You are going to work among your flowers and in the vegetable beds. Before you are tired of this delightful and absorbing occupation you are to slip into a hammock swing on a shady veranda or between the boughs of two large trees.

You have pushed aside many interesting books and magazine articles all winter because you had so many other interests that absorbed your time and attention. Now the time is at hand when you should enjoy all the romances and other special articles you like. How peaceful and sweet is the movement of the hammock and the freshness of those breezes as you read on and on, soon to find yourself in the land of dreams.

If you jump up with a start, almost angry because you have taken several hours of rest, you may enjoy an extra bit of nourishment. Let this be a tumblerful of milk and a couple of biscuits. When you tire of this diet alternate it with a plate of fresh fruit.

How splendid by way of variety to sit down at the table with the children feeling that you have not done one thing to put the house in apple-pie order nor to prepare the luncheon. To make the most of this holiday you will want dainty summer dishes instead of those wholesome, nourishing meals which you have been planning and preparing all winter and spring.

While you are resting and taking life easy you will enjoy a number of cheese dishes, such as cheese pudding, cauliflower and cheese, cheese toast and cheese omelet. Though you have had your quota of salads all winter you still want them, especially when they are made up of a number of luscious fruits, and such vegetables as tomatoes, asparagus and others that have been extremely scarce all winter. You never enjoyed ice cream and cake so much in your life. You are wiser than the youngest of your children when it comes to the enjoying of these goodies. The flavor comes in the knowledge that these desserts have been prepared for you. You have not had a hand in their making as you have been doing.

To the Girl Who Works

MOST women who are working besides looking forward to their weekly wage, are trying to gather a little capital for future use. This is a worthy ambition and still there is one that is often neglected which is really worthier and more important.

However interested you are in your work and wages your health should be of first consideration. Your highest hope and ambition should be to have good health and to keep it. Health is a coveted asset to all women, and most of all to the woman who works.

This thought should always be with you, and especially now when the opportunities for improving your health are close at hand. The easiest and best way to get health and to guard it is by enjoying plenty of fresh air, which you can get for the mere asking. When you look into the mirror you complain that your cheeks have not a slight suggestion of rose leaves. The only sensible way to make your complexion healthy and pink is to fill your lungs the liveliest day with plenty of fresh air and to destroy all the waste and poisonous tissues.

Make it your business to fit up a small and inexpensive sleeping porch and sleep out of doors all summer. If you have a small sleeping porch leading off the room, be sure and make use of it. If you live in the country and your house has a large veranda, turn it into sleeping porches and insist on the whole family sleeping out of doors.

You may have been humoring yourself with the idea that you cannot take cold baths in winter time, the shock is too much for your heart action. If your heart is strong, summer is a good time for you to get used to cold water. Perhaps when you once get accustomed to it you will want to keep it up all year round. It is worth while trying long over the summer at least.

Taking cold baths may stimulate the desire for swimming, especially if you have a good matatorium or small lake near by. After you once learn you will find it a delightful sport, and it is as healthy as it is pleasurable.

This is only a small part of your exercise for the summer months. If you are seated all the time or most of the time at your work you need movement, exercise, to energize your muscles. You should count on five miles a day at least, and more when you have a half holiday off or on your vacation. This will keep you strong of mind no less than in body. To enjoy all the pleasures of walking, go in the parks and in the country whenever you can. Do not be thwarted in this desire because you have to take a trolley or a train to get there. You will be liberally compensated by this extra expenditure of energy.

If you are a real athletic girl, as you should be, you will have the desire to take more exercise. I should either recommend tennis or golf. Both are pleasurable and healthy provided they are done in moderation. Tennis is somewhat more energetic, and it is especially good if you desire to reduce in weight. On the other hand, golf is an easy and good exercise. It makes for grace and strength both.

Vivian's Heart Chats

THE other day one of our council friends said in a letter: "I am very much worried about the feeling my husband has for my mother. He is jealous of our affection." He accuses me of giving my mother more thought and love than him. I blame him the more, because he knew that I am an only child and I have been all in all to my mother ever since I lost my father. I am so exasperated at times by my husband's folly that I want to leave him and go back to mother."

I should pass this question, merely answering the young woman, had not a number of such cases come to my notice. It is the height of folly for any man or woman to be jealous of the other's affection for his or her family. If they are normal-thinking men and women they will understand that it is far more natural for us to care for our own flesh and blood than to be indifferent about them. This is especially true where a mother is concerned.

As children we are not conscious of the sacrifices and responsibilities that come to the average good and loving mother. Usually it is only after a man or woman is grown and considers the social relations of life somewhat more seriously that he commences to acknowledge to himself that, however devoted he is to his mother, he can never do enough for her. Now if most men realize this important truth, certainly women do, and it is only natural that they should want to give expression to this feeling by love and plenty of attention.

If a man really loves his wife he should be fond of her people, especially of her mother. When this feeling is not natural he should try and cultivate it. He should realize it is very hard to give up loving the one you have, clung to in affection from the day you were born. Should he for some real or supposedly real reason not be able to have a genuine feeling of affection for his mother-in-law, he should not foolishly interfere between wife and daughter or do anything that might shake this loyal and natural bond of love.

He should go further and realize that it is his duty to be considerate.

GEORGIA'S NEW GOVERNOR.

With yesterday's inauguration ceremonies Georgia passes to a new executive administration presided over by Judge Nat E. Harris, of Macon, a tried and true "war horse," who has served the state always well in its adversity, in its growth and in its days of prosperity.

Judge Harris fought a good, clean fight, and goes into the foremost office in the gift of Georgians, not only with an unclouded personal and political record, but unhampered by the many political debts which so often beset the professional politician. He enters the executive office under conditions which will enable him to render his best service to the state; his record as governor was not made in his campaign, but is to be made in his office in the capitol.

It is within the power of Governor Harris to achieve much for the state. He has reached the period of life when a man is most conscious of the fact that there is no aim higher than that of rendering true service. He becomes governor backed by the confidence of the people, even of those who opposed him in the campaign.

It is his purpose to do, and he will do, those things which make for the best and highest interests of the state.

He has important things to do. The state treasury is by no means overflowing; he must watch it with an eye that will keep expenditures within state income. The Western and Atlantic railroad problem is before him; the future of this valuable state property calls for the exercise of statesmanship's best judgment. There are other great problems with which legislature and governor will have to deal; it is fortunate that the two branches are in harmony and accord, for a legislature and an executive which are working at political cross purposes can often do much more harm than good.

In the selection of Judge Harris as governor Georgia has honored a distinguished confederate veteran who gave the best of his youthful service to his country. It has honored him not merely because he was a soldier in the service of the south, but because the same traits which made him a good soldier have made him an able man. Whether in the army, at the bar, on the bench or in the service of education he has always displayed those characteristics which marked him as a man of force and conservatism, of strength and ability, which mean the attainment of good results regardless of the point to which his energies are directed.

We predict for the new governor an administration that will win for him the hearts of the people as he has already won their confidence.

TO THE LEGISLATURE.

No more meritorious appeal will be made to the general assembly now in session than that in behalf of the common schools and of the institutions of higher learning in the state, which are comprised under the head of the University of Georgia and its branches, including the University of Georgia proper, the Georgia School of Technology, the State Normal school at Athens, the Georgia Normal and Industrial college, the North Georgia Agricultural college, the Georgia Medical college, the State College of Agriculture, the South Georgia Normal college and the Georgia Industrial School for Colored Youths. It will be seen that this list comprises all of the leading institutions of broader education which are under control and direction of the state.

As to the common schools, it is the duty of the general assembly to go the limit in their behalf. The university and all its branches—nine institutions—will ask for a total of only $47,500 more than has been given them annually by the state for the last two or more years, an average increase of scarcely more than $5,000 each.

The sums absolutely needed for their maintenance were arrived at as the result of a conference between the University of Georgia trustees and the heads of the respective institutions interested. The maintenance problem was taken up, discussed and the conclusion reached with the understanding that the state faces the necessity for careful economy in the matter of appropriations to be made at this session.

With this fact carefully in view, the university trustees and heads of the institutions named determined to make no request beyond their positive necessities.

It is a remarkable fact that they have asked for less than is actually demanded and justified by natural growth!

Having lived now for four years without increased assistance from the state, the time has come when the maintenance of their efficiency demands the slight increase they are asking. They must have it or become seriously crippled.

The university trustees have, likewise, endorsed the proposal to supplement the appropriation that will come to this state for agricultural extension, from the federal government, through the Smith-Lever bill, provided Georgia gives a like amount to that work.

There is no question this appropriation will mean much for the advancement of agriculture in Georgia. The return will come in far greater proportion than the comparatively small outlay would appear to justify. The legislature will, of course, find the way to take advantage of this splendid opportunity.

In this connection the appropriations for confederate pensions this year will be $75,000 less than last; the state saves enough here to take care of all the nine institutions named, and to put up Georgia's part of the agricultural extension fund. Thus, it is not a question of additional appropriation, but to using money actually saved as compared with last year's expenditures, where it is most needed.

PRACTICAL AND CLASSICAL.

The best educational thought of the world is addressing itself to the proper adjustment of the relations between classical and technical training.

The old theory—that which existed before the widespread recognition of the importance of technical training—was that the classical was the all-important factor in real education.

The technical schools were at first developed on the theory that the practical was the sole consideration, and that the classical was non-essential.

The classical, therefore, was being developed solely at the expense of the technical, and vice versa.

The best modern thought is now being directed on the theory that instead of there being a conflict between the two, the most satisfactory results can be obtained by coordinating the classical and the technical, equipping the students in each in such a manner as to give them the unquestionable benefit of the broader information thus made available.

This thought was very interestingly developed in a recent address by Fairfax Harrison, president Southern railway, on the occasion of the last commencement of the University of Georgia. Mr. Harrison struck a timely keynote in earnestly supporting vocational, industrial and technical forms of education, but cautioning those promoting practical education not to overlook the basic value of the classical in all education.

This viewpoint is particularly significant when emphasized by a man to whom trained workers mean so much. Mr. Harrison is right. Though there may have been for a long time a tyranny of the classics in their hold on general education; and though more practical training has not yet fully met the demands of progress, a tyranny of practical education could prove just as dangerous in another way, and threaten the very best there is in the spirit of our civilization.

The ideal of the republic is that every man is what he makes himself, and that he should be equipped for his life work through the democracy of the school representing the greatest of American institutions.

This is the most constructive period in the south's making, and there is urgent need for the trained man to meet industrial demands.

Yet, education must not lose its first principle—that of mental development and character-building making directly for permanent achievement rather than for immediate results counted too often in dollars and cents.

The real democracy of education is that which gives every boy the equal opportunity to train his mind and discover wherein his talent lies.

It is opposed to this principle to segregate the classics; make an aristocracy of them, and limit them to the boy who has many years to study; and on the other hand to so practicalize the course of study for the boy pushed to earn his living early in life that he is cut off from the broader culture afforded by a fundamental knowledge of the classics.

Modern educational method is proving every day that the cultural and practical departments of education can be so combined that neither one is sacrificed to the other, and that the boy as he acquires scholarship learns at the same time the initiative to apply it.

Georgia, in her educational program, blazing the way through her agricultural colleges; her strides in industrial and technical training, in her effort to give all her boys educational opportunity, must not let go the old ideal of the cultural education.

This cultural basis which begins with the academic in the most elementary of the one-room schools, should be held to as an integral part of any special line of education a boy pursues, and lead him on through the highest course in the university.

Whether he qualifies as doctor, lawyer, Bachelor of arts, the technical, industrial, civil or electrical engineer, he has his equipment, not merely to apply his knowledge, but become a leader in any vocation he chooses, if he is backed by the cultural force of classical knowledge.

COMMUNITY INTEREST.

The value of community interest has a shining example in the story of the Atlanta Southside Carnegie library, which is to be built at once on the corner of Capitol and Georgia avenues.

Last November, at the request of a group of "little citizens" of the south side, who attended the story-telling hour at the library Friday afternoons, a book deposit was made by the main library in the end of a store on the south side. The first afternoon nine books were taken out. Before the end of the month 200 books were taken out one afternoon by both children and grown-ups. The store was small, and as the crowd grew larger they would stand in line on the sidewalk awaiting their turn to interview the busy librarian.

In six weeks' time the entire community was so aroused in interest in their books that the librarian at the main library, the board of trustees and a large contingent of citizens urged council to give the necessary appropriation for a lot on the south side, that they might meet the terms of a library from the Carnegie corporation.

Times were hard, they were told, but community interest was insistent, and the result was an appropriation of $3,000 from council for the lot, which secured the $17,000 from the Carnegie corporation for a library building on the south side.

Whenever community interest is honestly aroused and people pull together for what they want they will always get it. Atlanta needs less indifference to civic responsibilities, more intolerance of petty politics and a revival in community interest, which will bring to her every institution the same success crowning the community interest of the south side people in their beautiful new library.

AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT.

Keen interest is being aroused in the various efforts being made to bring together the country woman and the city woman in the distribution of their business, as it centers in the home of the one and the other. The country woman at this season of the year is rich in the products of the farm, which she wishes to dispose of. The city woman needs them and wants them, but there has not been the medium of bringing the two elements together.

A letter from a farm woman who represents a type—a great number of farm women—is published in another column on this page, setting forth the present needs of the farm woman in desiring to sell her wares before they go to waste around her. She has fresh vegetables, fresh fruits, fresh eggs, fresh butter. She has recipes for preserves, jams, pickles, which she has inherited from her grandmother of the antebellum south, who was famed for her culinary art.

The state department of agriculture is now at work to create a market agency, the first purpose of which is to bring together those who would buy and those who would sell such products.

The first obligation involved is the co-operation of the city woman and the farm woman, with the city woman taking the initiative, and working through the state market agent. He must be sure there is going to be a demand for the country woman's wares, before he can instruct her how to send them. He is posted with the daily status of the market, and he can keep his patrons informed.

This is a most interesting social problem, and the successful solving of it will affect every rural home in Georgia.

The department of agriculture in establishing the market agency has made a good start, and the result will be measured largely by the zeal manifested in bringing together those concerned and by developing their interest in what the agency can do for them.

Together with the establishment of the market agency the message of its significance and meaning must reach the people for whom it is intended. They must not be expected to come to the market agency, but the market agency must try to reach them, representing, as it can be made to do, a most practical branch of agricultural extension work. The experiment will be observed with intense interest by all Georgians who appreciate the urgent necessity of pushing all forces concerned in the direction of our agricultural prosperity.

And the Cummins law may make the summer vacationists mad enough to smash the baggage smasher.

Comets will have to develop more than two tails to attract the notice of a world on fire.

They have given Lord Kitchener the garter, when what he needed most was more rope.

Latest allied prediction is that the real war will begin in six weeks. Nothing like keeping the enemy in suspense.

And still there will be enough expert testimony in the Thaw jury trial to muddle the plain issue.

Now for the American tourist with the guide book which tells him how to see his own country first.

How City and State Can Help the Woman Who Lives in Country

By Irma Dooley.
Through the market agent of the department of agriculture in the state capitol, the city woman can help her sister, the farm woman, today, if she will purchase the wares of the farm woman which she has for sale today. She can do this through the market agent of the state department of agriculture, Mr. J. A. Montgomery, his office marking one of the most practical acts of the regime of Hon. J. D. Price, commissioner of agriculture.

At the present moment a general and commendable interest in the farm woman and her problems has been aroused through many agencies, principally among them the United States department of agriculture. Colleges of agriculture are planning far-reaching work for the woman, and literature for the farm woman at last is being bright.

But while those plans are being made for systematized work, the woman at the farm today has a quantity of fruits and vegetables on hand which she would like to sell. She has dairy products, too, poultry and fresh eggs, but she can't leave home to go to town to sell them. The city woman can't go to the country for them every time she needs them, even if she has an automobile, and yet here in this very situation lies one of the most practical ways in which the city and the farm woman could help each other.

A Letter.
To The Constitution yesterday came a letter bearing this message from a woman residing on a farm, near Canton, Ga.:

"I will have for sale almost the entire summer, fresh vegetables, fruits, butter, milk and eggs, and I would like to sell them in the city. I should also like to contract to can berries or fruits, and to make preserves. My husband and I would like to put up these things in the good old-fashioned way without the use of acids. Unless I get something of this kind to do, I will have to see so much that is good go to waste. If I could get in touch with any of the city women, I could be preserving for them. Best of all, they could pay me to put up the fruits, selling them at a stipulated price, or I might have them furnish the sugar, spices and necessary ingredients to go with the fruits I could furnish. I can produce recommendations not only of my ability but my honesty. I need money very much at this time, and I would like to have you put the letter gives full details as to the locality of the farm and sanitary surroundings, and expresses, not only the situation in the case of this one woman, but that of hundreds of women on the farm.

The Market Agent.
It was referred yesterday to the executive board of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Nellie Peters Black, chairman of the country life department, referred it direct to Mr. J. A. Montgomery, market agent of the department of agriculture.

This brought forth the urgent appeal of Mrs. Black to the members of the board present that they inform the women in the various parts of the state, through the market agent in the state department of agriculture they could be aided in the disposal of their wares.

When seen about the way women especially can be helped by the agency he represents, Mr. Montgomery stated that the market agent in the state department of agriculture they could be aided in the disposal of their wares. When seen about the way women especially can be helped by the agency he represents, Mr. Montgomery stated that the market agent in the state department of agriculture they could be aided in the disposal of their wares.

Marked Congested.
"This week the market is over-congested with fresh vegetables, and it would scarcely pay the farm women to ship them here except at a risk, but that may not be the case in the future. The market agent in the state department of agriculture they could be aided in the disposal of their wares. When seen about the way women especially can be helped by the agency he represents, Mr. Montgomery stated that the market agent in the state department of agriculture they could be aided in the disposal of their wares.

Speaking further of the purpose of the market agency, Mr. Montgomery stated that he had sold for farm women almost as great a variety of farm products as he had for men, though not in large quantities; and that he had recently sold some fine stock for a well-known Georgia woman farmer.

Three Southern Planters.
(From Collier's Weekly.)
Frank Johnson of the flat region of South Carolina raises six hundred bales of cotton annually on as many acres. He employs an expert to direct his negro laborers and "dopes" his land with fifty-five dollars worth of commercial fertilizer for the acre. When cotton fetches twelve cents a pound, he makes a "killing" when the price drops to seven cents, he goes broke.

Jim Brown, another cotton grower, lives on a rented farm, knows little, and has little except live stock. He raises a crop of corn and raises a few hogs. He has a good year he "pays out" and has a little money for Christmas. In a bad year he has what the lien merchant does not take. The neopresident landlord has a first lien for rent on cotton, and, as a rule, gets it.

But no lien merchant nonresident landlord practices James Sheppard, who lives in the hill country. Sheppard had forty-five bales of the 1913 crop when the war news reached him last August, and fifty more in the field to pick. "I refused thirteen and a half cents for my old cotton last year," he said, "but I'm not going to worry much. I guess I'll hold both crops till the price goes up again. I don't owe the bank anything, and I have plenty of corn, potatoes, fodder, hogs and poultry."

The group Sheppard represents, which is very small, reduces their cotton crops this year because common sense dictated it. The Frank Johnson class did so because their bank and fertilizer credit was restricted, and the poor class of tenants because lien credit was simpler.

The general reduction throughout the south is about 15 per cent. Southern farmers, knowing cotton to be their most profitable crop, will continue to raise it; but they are learning that one-crop production means idleness of live stock, labor and land about half the year, while overhead charges must be paid on the whole outfit. They are beginning to understand, too, that while they cannot compete on a large scale with the wheat growers of Minnesota, wheat raised as a by-product is nearly all profit. Diversified farming calls for diversified information, and that is something ignorant people can't buy even from a lien merchant.

Climate, soil and all other resources in the south, as in the north, the east, and the west, are diversified, but resourcefulness is not. Diversify knowledge and the crops will diversify themselves.

LOVE'S MEETING

By FRANK L. STANTON.
I.
IN the old meeting house so dear, the starlight of her eyes—
I didn't read my titles clear to mansions in the skies.
For this green earth where Love has birth, so beautiful to see,
Was more than dreams of Paradise and Heaven enough for me.
II.
THE text, "Love one another," came sweetly home that night,
And, dreaming in her face, I said: "He's got the gospel right!"
So gentle the commandment, so plain and sweet a thing,
I'll never wear a crown for that where saints and angels sing!
III.
THE music of the old-time hymns went soaring up above—
Went in a dream to Heaven, as on the wings of Love:
And I—a wanderer of the way, knew 'twas "Amazing Grace"
That led me where Life's dream was—to the beauty of her face.
IV.
I DIDN'T seek the Mourner's Bench, to ask for counsel there,
For Heaven and earth seemed singing, and Joy was everywhere,
Light in the shadows of Life's night, for which a soul gave thanks,—
The light from Love's celestial shore on Jordan's stormy banks!
V.
'TIS not so far to Heaven, whatever the bright stars say,
For, hand-in-hand, the glad way home, Heaven met us on the way!
And the text, "Love one another," makes music in our days
And shall, till Time has led us to the parting of the ways.

PLANS ACCEPTED FOR HANDSOME BRANCH LIBRARY ON SOUTH SIDE

The plans have been completed and accepted and Atlanta citizens on the south side are to have a beautiful branch library on the corner of Capitol and Georgia avenues.

With a small deposit of books, housed in the corner of a store, the space given for the purpose, and a large amount of community interest the South Side library began last November. The first afternoon on which the books were taken out, before the end of the month more than 200 were taken out one afternoon, and the little folks and older ones lined up on the sidewalk by December waiting their turn to get to the library. The store was frequently over-crowded, especially about Christmas time, but the storekeeper realized the value of the library and never complained, and the community continued to patronize the institution and urge that the library be established in that section of the city.

So impressed was Mrs. Percival Sneed, the librarian of Carnegie library, with this expression of community interest she recommended in her December report to the library trustees that work for the new library begin at once. Plans were formulated in that direction with the result that work on the building will soon begin.

"I had only to tell the trustees of the interest manifested," said Mrs. Sneed as she showed with pride yesterday the plans for

"Business Disentangled."
(From Collier's Weekly.)
For ten years now the politics of the United States have revolved mainly about the question whether large units of business should be encouraged or destroyed. One political party, headed by President Wilson and many other leaders, has been that competition through small units should be preserved and enforced. The other point of view, held most conspicuously by the progressive leaders, has been that large units in business should be encouraged under proper regulation.

President Wilson himself, his party and his attorney general are all on record in opposition to this trend. It is to be hoped that they will not be led, by mere pride of opinion, to oppose the solution which the courts, in their decisions, are bringing about. The United States circuit court of appeals for the New Jersey district has held, in dismissing the Steel suit, that, in spite of the size of the principal unit, competition in the iron trade is sounder and healthier than that which would result from the decree of the supreme court which has upheld the decree of the lower court that big business is not necessarily a monopoly. Legitimate business has a constructive destiny, and the state must speed the fulfillment of that destiny just as it must speed the abolition of the slavery system, of the trust system, and the improper exploitation of labor. The Sherman law, never clearly defined, now finds sanctuary in the new federal trade commission, which, thanks to these decisions, has a very clear before it as the arbiter of business in the future, and in a really disinterested and objective manner. The public will be the gainer in economy and in efficiency of output, for we are entering upon an era of co-operation rather than conflict.

War Orders and Overcapitalization.
(From The Wall Street Journal.)
Warnings regarding the over-estimation of the profits our manufacturers are realizing from "war" orders are in order. But when such warnings are issued while a boom of any kind is in progress, they are usually ascribed to a constitutive conservatism of conservatism. In some cases, the self-interest of those issuing them.

Entirely removed from such suspicions are the words of Professor E. R. A. Seligman, written a decade ago, when the world was at peace. Much of the thought of the new era, but at this particular time the message seems prophetic:

"A period of good times may be initiated by large orders for some particular business—due, for instance, to a new navy program, or to internal improvements, or to a war, or to internal demand. Prices rise in that business, production increases, the movement spreads to other lines, and the new enterprises are financed by loans from the banks or by the sale of securities. In capitalization, proportionate to the anticipated earnings. The psychological character of these credit transactions is such, as we have seen, that the capitalization will inevitably be put too high. The hoped for conservation will become a real disaster. It becomes urgent to reduce the capitalization to its true market value on the basis of actual earnings. This process of readjustment of overcapitalized values necessarily involves loss; but readjustment of this kind is a human kindness that is necessary. If we have a crisis or panic; if it can be brought about gradually, we have a process of liquidation."

The process of overcapitalization has not gone far, yet it is alarming. A temporary check from the fear of our participation in the conflict. But if this fear happily blows over, and if the pace at which America continues to fill European orders increases at the rate indicated up to the present, overcapitalization will become a real disaster. It is well that we begin thinking of this now. We have a profligate way of doing our thinking after the event.

Practical Philanthropy.
The wonderful part of this simple statement is the fact that through all the changes of the past century, the public mind in attitude neither weakened nor wavered. In the meantime the poor Scotch boy had acquired millions beyond conception, and it might have been natural that the "deceit and snare of riches" should have made him forget. But the result shows that he did not forget, and that he gave in the direction of which he knew personally the practical value," continued Mrs. Sneed.

It is moving to think that the free public libraries which have become an important part of the civilization of the twentieth century are the result of the enlightenment and human kindness of the few who, in a great measure, have given in the direction of which he knew personally the practical value," continued Mrs. Sneed.

TAX LAW DRAINED BY NEW EXECUTIVE

Declares Sale of Liquor in Georgia Must Be Stopped, and Urges Legislation to Preserve W. & A. Property.

The keynote of the inaugural address and message of Governor Nat Harris, which he delivered before a joint session of the general assembly immediately after his inauguration yesterday, was the strictest possible economy and the betterment of the education system of the state.

After praising the work which has been accomplished by the tax equalization law and by Judge John C. Hart, state tax commissioner, he indicated that difficulty which is encountered this year in the payment of taxes, owing to financial conditions generally. This, he said, will necessitate caution on the part of the general assembly in the voting of extra appropriations. He suggested as a means of better handling the finances that the ways and means committee and the appropriations committee might be continued, as they were in former years.

Upon the subject of pensions for Confederate veterans he suggested that, owing to the advanced years and feebleness of many veterans, it might be advisable to increase the pensions appropriation in order better to take care of them. He suggested a constitutional amendment which, before its passage, would give the state power to recover from its present financial straits.

Governor Harris urged more attention for the legislature for the office of compiler of public records.

Would Strengthen Militia.
Governor Harris urged strongly a strengthening of the state militia, pointing out that Georgia's expansion of territory in the past has depended largely upon the militia for protection in case of war.

After pointing out that Georgia enjoys the painful distinction of belonging to a group of four states which lead the record for illiteracy in the United States, he urged the adoption of a compulsory education law and the improvement of the state's educational system.

Under the stars of a summer day, amid these historic surroundings, I come to enter upon the duties of the high office which the people of the state have conferred upon me.

To one who has lived in this commonwealth from his young manhood through its infancy, its adolescence, its maturity and aging in a small way in the administration of its government, this day is a day of great significance. It is a day in the memory of all his after days.

It is no small honor to be chosen Governor of Georgia, the largest of the original thirteen colonies, the Empire State of the South, with a people devoted to the principles of the government of the fathers and the settlement of a new country, the source and rapid multiplication of inhabitants, the state in which the attention and bidding high for the admiration of all the people of this union.

Geography, climate, soil, the northern portion is diversified by rugged mountains, the middle and southern portion vast stretches of fertile fields invite the attention of the farmer and planter, and the southern harvest for the people of the whole land.

This is the state for which you gentlemen are selected to make the laws during the coming two years, to aid in its progress and to secure the happiness and welfare of its teeming population.

way the deliberate conclusion of the general assembly reached after full examination and consideration of the proposed law.

I most earnestly recommend to you gentlemen of the two houses, this suggestion: Let the legislature fully understand the dangers to the commonwealth will be incurred if the law is not passed. Let the people be made fully and intelligently advised.

TAX LAW DRAINED BY NEW EXECUTIVE

Declares Sale of Liquor in Georgia Must Be Stopped, and Urges Legislation to Preserve W. & A. Property.

The keynote of the inaugural address and message of Governor Nat Harris, which he delivered before a joint session of the general assembly immediately after his inauguration yesterday, was the strictest possible economy and the betterment of the education system of the state.

After praising the work which has been accomplished by the tax equalization law and by Judge John C. Hart, state tax commissioner, he indicated that difficulty which is encountered this year in the payment of taxes, owing to financial conditions generally. This, he said, will necessitate caution on the part of the general assembly in the voting of extra appropriations. He suggested as a means of better handling the finances that the ways and means committee and the appropriations committee might be continued, as they were in former years.

Upon the subject of pensions for Confederate veterans he suggested that, owing to the advanced years and feebleness of many veterans, it might be advisable to increase the pensions appropriation in order better to take care of them. He suggested a constitutional amendment which, before its passage, would give the state power to recover from its present financial straits.

Governor Harris urged more attention for the legislature for the office of compiler of public records.

Passage of Laws.
The making of laws, gentlemen, is no light matter. Law is the expression of the people's will through constitutional channels. The making of laws should be a solemn act when it has been passed through the hands of the legislature, the highest body of the state.

From long observation and experience, I am convinced that the laws of this state are those which are most carefully considered, most fully discussed and then solemnly enacted. The grade and haste in the making of laws during the session in the past has been a source of regret to the people.

But while this is my personal view, I shall expect the legislature, in every case where the appropriations are made, to have sufficient tax revenue to meet the needs of the state.

To the same end, it would be well to require by rule or state a joint meeting at stated intervals of these committees in the future, in order that the needs of the state may be met in a timely manner.

Such a course would not encroach upon the independence of the legislature, but would be a wise and prudent measure.

The approximate income of the state ought to be ascertained by every legislator and the amount of appropriations which this income will permit should be determined.

The North Georgia Agricultural and Mechanical college at Dalton is doing a great work for mountain boys and girls and deserves the support and commendation of the legislature.

who would act at last as the executive officer to carry out the ideas of the commission.

Under the constitution, candidates for state offices, including the governor, United States senators, judges and others, are required to file with the comptroller general an itemized statement of their campaign expenses incurred in the primary or general election.

The expenses of these campaigns have become so enormous that only a very rich man or one who happens to possess a number of friends willing to contribute, can afford to embark upon a contest. The amount expended is so great in comparison with the salary involved that unfavorable criticism is often incurred even though the candidate is successful.

The law should be so framed as to compel obedience to the same so that the evil may be really remedied.

HONESTY AND EFFICIENCY REQUISITES FOR SALESMEN

Editor Firing Line: I noticed in the papers a few days since that at a recent convention of the Ad. Men in Chicago that either in a report that was made or a paper that was read in the city was proclaimed to the world at large that the best results from newspaper advertising was from such people as were known to be reliable, largely because the cream of advertisers use such papers more extensively than any class, and probably pay the highest price for the space used. Admitting this to be true, is it anything but natural that it should be set upon record that it will be crystallized in all of the business men, all teachers and politicians have dwelt on the importance and value of honesty in the principles embodied in the old motto, "Honesty is the best policy."

The day when the smooth tongue of an unscrupulous and unprincipled salesmen is able to roll up big orders, but whose personal honesty and integrity was so flimsy as to be blown away by a puff of wind, is a day when the honest and efficient salesmen has passed. This is as it should be in this day of advanced thought and complicated interlocking system of business methods, as it is necessary to have every cog in this machine fit and running smoothly and perfectly as human ingenuity can make them, and honesty is the first requisite and efficiency the second.

Considering the above, the suggestion naturally arises as to why any man should be in a position to know anything about these matters, and the answer is that there is a man known to me, and by a great many more salesmen are held in esteem, who has demonstrated the value of educational campaigns even in a field of this character, and so to be hoped that the same rule may apply to the press of the country, the great medium by which public opinion is moulded, and which is furnishing the greatest opportunity for good or evil any machine, if such it may be called, that the world has ever known to exist.

Permit us to sound a note of warning in one of our papers, the highest types of fraud and dishonesty, which is for any business house in any part of the country, and which is for their customers upon whom they establish confidence and create their business, they should use this established following as a means by which they may eventually receive their customers by charging greater profits than they would if they felt in their hearts that they were doing the highest type of dishonesty by getting that to which they are not entitled, and to the who are friends from long association?

It is our opinion, without knowledge or care, and as they have one chairman of the national convention and one chairman of the Southern Passenger association, and one chairman of the five passenger associations. Mr. E. H. Jones was also elected chairman of this college of railroad chairmen. Yours very truly, J. H. ANDREWS, State Press Chairman, T. P. A., Atlanta, Ga.

Good Fall Business.

Joseph T. Hamilton, the genial motor car dealer, who has been in the business for several years, reports that the demand for his cars has been exceptionally good, with harvesting machines in the foreground. He says, "I have never seen the crop so good as this year. All around in the section where I was a week or so ago, cotton was in the field and the grain crop looks most promising. The farmers can get anything like a fair price for their crop. This ought to have a corking good business for me. Hamilton will get back among his trade about the 1st of July."

Big Opening Order.

Chief C. Johnson, one of the "Red Seal" boys, who makes his headquarters in Columbus, spent several days at the Orr shoe house last week. While here he had the good fortune to purchase a pair of shoes, and he was so pleased with them that he ordered a pair for himself. He says, "I have never seen the crop so good as this year. All around in the section where I was a week or so ago, cotton was in the field and the grain crop looks most promising. The farmers can get anything like a fair price for their crop. This ought to have a corking good business for me. Hamilton will get back among his trade about the 1st of July."

ALBANY BOYS TO HAVE BARBECUE AND PICNIC

Secretary Wallace, of T. M. S. and P. Association, Predicts Good Times for Travelers.

Editor Firing Line: I am knocking at your door again, feeling as I do, that the latch-string hangs on the outside, and that you are always willing to contribute space to those who have the best interests of the traveling men at heart.

With some prospect of an understanding between this country and Germany before us, also a fairly good crop outlook in this part of Georgia, in the way of melons, cantaloupes, peaches and other fruit, the traveling boys here are "killing a big one" this fall, if everything goes well.

Along with this assurance of good business we shall make preparations for a barbecue and picnic for traveling men and their wives about the first week in September. We want to make this occasion one not soon to be forgotten by those who attend. Entertainment as well as refreshments will be provided and we will expect all the "boys on the road" here that day.

While this is not a political organization, still, if with political aspirations, this will be a fine time to get acquainted and to extend the usual hearty handshake. I received a letter a few days ago from President Wilson thanking me as secretary of this organization, and all the members, for expressions of confidence at this critical moment in his diplomatic relations with Germany. I hear very few people talking in a wobbly way towards Germany. Don't know how the other "boys" feel about it, but will acknowledge I am not as mad now as I was a few days ago, though I could get mad again if I was forced to do so.

F. A. WALLACE, Sec. T. M. S. & P. Assn., Albany, Ga.

BIG OPENING BILL FOR RAGAN-MALONE CO.

One of the largest and best house sales recorded at Ragan-Malone company was that of the Ragan-Malone company, which has an opening bill for a Florida merchant and ran well up into the thousands. The company reports that the past week was one of the best it has enjoyed for some time, being larger than any week so far in the month, and that it looks quite likely that the business for this June will eclipse the sales for June a year ago.

In the Social Whirl

By Isma Dooly.

It is rare that the outgoing of a governor in Georgia has more than the significance, socially, of a few semi-official entertainments, but in the gracious administration of the social affairs of the executive mansion during the last regime, Mrs. John Marshall Slaton has left a brilliant record, and has indicated the many ways in which the lady of the mansion can express a hospitality not only patriotic in spirit, but very practically beneficial.

Whenever the mansion has been opened since her residence there, she has been the queenly hostess, bidding all who entered sincere welcome, whether the occasion was to greet the national officers of the Daughters of the American Revolution, her own personal friends or the group of philanthropic women who came to sell the little garments which had been made by the unemployed women, desiring to sell them.

HER WORK FOR MUSIC IN ATLANTA.

The mansion was theirs as well as hers, she made them feel, and, wherever she went as the wife of Georgia's governor, she imparted the beauty and charm of her personality, and generously gave of her talents and her interest. She was president of the Atlanta Musical association, and carried it through a most successful year, promoting the work of the Atlanta Symphony orchestra. She encouraged the women of the state in their organized energies for practical education, not to neglect the more cultural branches, but to accomplish themselves and to establish an art life in a section possessing a rich heritage in that direction.

This was the theme of an address she made in 1914 before the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, who prize it as a contribution to the literary files of their organization. Last summer she opened the mansion for two weeks for an exhibition of pictures under the auspices of the Atlanta Art association, and during the winter she gave a series of musicales in the mansion when not only professional artists were heard, but when local talent was given the opportunity of exploitation under brilliant auspices. During one week she entertained hundred guests, attending conventions here. On many occasions Mrs. Slaton contributed to the progress of entertainments for charity, her dramatic readings sought for by the many from the critical audiences assembled at the Drama league to the more quiet ones in the vicinity of the little church house struggling for money to buy the first carpet.

THE IMPERANCE OF IT.

The new phase of life which has come to the women of the south in athletic sports is taking them by storm, and like everything else that comes that is new and a pleasure, the cautious are holding up a finger of warning. Women, no matter how strong they are, cannot suddenly become female "John L. Sullivans" in strength, nor can they play thirty-six holes of golf during the day and then dance half the night without getting just as many lines in their faces as overwork of any kind brings.

To begin with, climatic conditions have to be considered. Temperance requires a modified activity during the day, when the sun shines just about as hard as the wind blows when it blows. It is not so bad about the tan and the freckles, because they wear off, but the peeted woman who has worn lace frilled skirts and high-heeled slippers the greater part of her life, can't suddenly develop a brawn and sinew that will withstand excessive athletics.

Wise women at home for the summer will take the club schedule of tea-dances and dinner-dances and map out their weekly programs, so that the day they are athletic and golf, they will not trip the light fantastic the same evening. Golf one day and dancing the next would be reasonable, and women would not find under these circumstances the heat of the summer too debilitating.

A TRUE STORY.

A true story is told of an Atlanta woman who went to a certain fashionable resort where the women diet, take the water cure, golf and do all the things that warrant reducing the flesh and warrant beauty. She got her prescription from the doctor for her baths, he readily seeing she had not been exercising; and that her flesh was over-eating, and that her flesh was not firm.

He put her on a reasonable diet. She was to take a certain kind of bath and shower every day, and a rub, and "blankets," and some exercise. But besides this the dear lady made arrangements to take a golf lesson every day, and she engaged an osteopath to rub her every night. She arose at 8 o'clock, had a light breakfast and went for a walk. She played golf till 12 o'clock, took another walk before luncheon; ate lightly, and rested a moment on the porch until time for another walk or more golf. She took her bath at 5.30 and her rub, then dressed for dinner at 8. After dinner she did the strenuous dancing, etc., and at 10.30 o'clock the osteopath came. Her flesh began to decrease—yes. She looked pale and guile in summer time, but southern women have to be very careful how they suddenly go in for the pastimes to which they are not accustomed, and to which the climate does not always tend to help on.

The golf skirt is comfortable; the outing hat is bewitching and becoming, and the ruddy glow on a woman's skin is pretty, but there is no use to forsake whether the one or the other the silk stockings and dainty slippers. A parasol is not half bad in the late of the ballroom, with three large round tables down the ball center. At intervals were umbrella-shaped rose trees with handsome gilt urns and baskets, festoons of evergreen myrtle entwined among them. To accentuate the deep color there were also lots of bright purple Japanese stitice and the same velvety tasseled flowers were piled at the base of the rose trees, the combination of the rose and purple suggesting that imperial opulence becoming in a host as prodigal as "The Sun" and "The Moon."

It was a merry, light-hearted affair, formal speeches being omitted. Judge and Mrs. Lamar greeted the guests who arrived for the dinner, but there was no formal reception.

The toasts were brief. Judge Lamar acted as toastmaster after proposing the toast, "The President of the United States." Consul Herman Gade spoke for the foreign commissioners. Reuben E. H. for the exposition officials. Senator Overman, of North Carolina, on "The Senate," and Congressman Julius Kahn on "The House of Representatives."

Mrs. Lamar wore a very becoming frock of bright yellow tulle, embroidered in crystals forming scattered flowers over the fabric, the corsage being made of fine tulle with net embroidered in beads and yellow stones, the combination enhancing Mrs. Lamar's dark-eyed, Spanish type of beauty. Mrs. Lamar wore pearls and several handsome diamond pieces.

ficiating. The announcement came as a surprise to their many friends and the young couple are now receiving scores of congratulations. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Di Cristina left for a trip to New York, and after July 5 will be at home to their friends at No. 54 East Georgia avenue.

Young Atlanta Architect Wins Rome Scholarship In Nation-Wide Contest

A national academic distinction has been conferred upon an Atlanta youth, in the "Rome Scholarship" awarded to Philip Trammel Shutz, a graduate of Georgia Tech and assistant in the firm of Hentz & Reid, Atlanta architects.

Less than twenty-five years of age, and only three years out of college, young Shutz, a native of Columbus, Ga., in competition with brilliant minds throughout North America, won one of the most enviable international scholarships held forth to aspiring students.

Upon the opening of the next scholastic season, he goes to Rome, Italy, to take his course in the American Academy of Architecture, with full expense paid and $1,500 annual expense fund.

Brilliant Student.

For the past year young Shutz has been attached to the Hentz & Reid office. Prior to that time he was an assistant in the architectural firm of Hentz & Reid, from which he graduated in 1912 with signal honors. He was distinguished as one of the most promising students in the institution, and Professor Francis P. Smith, instructor in architecture at Tech, pronounced him the most brilliant pupil he had ever observed.

In discussing the winning of the scholarship by Mr. Shutz, Professor Smith said:

"Rome even more than Athens is the fountain-head of inspiration for the architect, for there were gathered up the precious threads of the Greek style, which, woven with other strands equally valuable, produced a fabric which is almost inexhaustible in its richness and suggestion. The masterful planning, composition and construction of the remains of ancient Rome, with all their wealth of ideas, are perhaps the most precious heritage of all nations today. There are to be found the great fundamental principles of design which have dominated the greatest structures of all ages since the close of the middle-age.

showed a firm grasp of the problem and was remarkable in its presentation.

Warm Fraise From Mend.

"The four logists were allowed six weeks in which to restudy their solutions and make the final drawings at a sufficient interval to cover all expenses during this time. Unless the European situation necessitates a postponement, Mr. Shutz will report in Rome about the first of October. The academy now occupies its perfectly appointed new building adjoining the grounds of the Villa Aurelia. Here the fellows in architecture, sculpture and painting live and work together under the direction of expert teachers. In addition to the splendid library facilities of the academy, the students have access to all the great libraries and collections in the capital. A most unequalled opportunity for research work, intelligent study of the actual monuments of Rome for the first part of their work, and the inspiration derived from this can scarcely be over-estimated. It is devoted to travel and education would be difficult to imagine.

Seven Men Accepted For Marine Service By Atlanta Station

Seven recruits for the United States marine service have been accepted by the Atlanta branch of the marine recruiting service during the week ending June 26. The seven men who have come from all parts of Georgia will be placed in training.

Those who successfully passed the examination at the Atlanta office were J. L. Smith, H. P. Babb, W. E. Gallagher, W. M. Merriman, R. M. Johnston, M. H. Hunt and G. L. Hinton.

"The people in general are more patriotic in regard to enlisting at the present time," stated the lieutenant, "than I have seen them for many months. We are having far more applications now than we have had in some time."

When asked just what bearing the European war had on that sentiment, Lieutenant Colvocoresses stated that he felt sure it was mostly due to the influence that the number of applications has increased.

STARS STOPPING AT MONTGOMERY

Conducted by L. F. Winchell.

KLEINE'S "SPENDTHRIFT" MARY FULLER MONDAY COMES TO THE STRAND AT ALPHA THEATER

Irene Fenwick, Star of "Song of Songs," Enacts the Leading Role.

"Mary of the Circus" Presents the Clever Actress in Tinsel and Spangles.

Atlanta moving picture lovers will find this week's bill at the Strand one that includes new releases from the best producing companies and the leading parts placed in the hands of the world's best screen players.

On Monday and Tuesday, George Kleine presents Irene Fenwick, in Porter Emerson Browne's celebrated play, "The Spendthrift." Wednesday and Thursday the Metro Pictures corporation presents Jane Grey and Lionel Barrymore, two distinguished stars, in "The Flaming Sword." Friday a return engagement of Betty Nansen in "A Woman's Resurrection." Saturday Marion Mason and George Fennelly, the famous house twins, in a circus drama, "The Flying Twins."

George Kleine's latest dramatic offering, "The Spendthrift," is a production of the famous Broadway success by Porter Emerson Browne, will be the attraction Tuesday.

"The Spendthrift" is straight from the Kleine New York studios, having been staged on a magnificent scale in keeping with the reputation of the house that made it and the splendid story.

Irene Fenwick will be seen in the role of the sweet-natured, true-hearted but extravagant Frances Ward, whose reckless disregard of her husband's money leads to mischief, a part well suited to the extraordinary talents of the actress.

Jane Grey, who is to be seen Wednesday and Thursday in B. A. Rolfe's production of "The Flaming Sword," is present playing the leading role in Willard Mack's great Republic theater success, "Kissed by Miss Grey," is co-starring in "The Flaming Sword" with the well-known actor, Lionel Barrymore.

"The Flaming Sword" is the latest production of the B. A. Rolfe company and the most recent output on the Metro program. Miss Grey made her first appearance on the screen in "The Little Green Lady," and so great was her popularity in that production that she was sought after by almost all the large producers, and B. A. Rolfe made the most attractive offer.

"The Flaming Sword" is in 200 scenes and required a cast of sixty principals and hundreds of minor players.

On Saturday the wonderful Thanet-houser twins, Madeline and Marion Fairbanks whose beauty has won them a unique place in the affection of picture fans are presented by Edwin Thanet-houser as the particularly featured players in a four-part Mutual production, "The Flying Twins." This production was made at the New York studios under the personal direction of Mr. Thanet-houser himself and has an unusually excellent cast. Harry La Pearl, long famous in circus circles, plays the role of the most prominent character in the play, that of the villainous circus acrobat, among the well-known picture celebrities appearing are Bertha Lee, also having major roles.

The story is pictured for the most part in three circumstances, the romance of the sawdust ring enters into the production.

Mayor John Purroy Mitchell, of New York, has been posing in a municipal incognito series for the Vitaphone company. These pictures are designed to show the inside workings of the government of New York city.

Beautiful Mary Fuller will continue to delight her thousands of admirers when she will start at the Alpha Monday as the circus queen of "Mary of the Circus." In this prize circus story her remarkable beauty is set off by the tinsel and spangles of a circus rider queen. Her adaptability in this role is wonderful. She is seen walking a tight rope, she is seen as a bareback rider and in other unusual capacities in which she acquires herself admirably.

In addition to "Circus Mary" the last installment of "The Black Box" will also be shown.

In this last episode all of the mysteries are solved. Craig having died in the fourteenth episode, Quest looks for the mysterious contents of the Black box. This is found and points to Professor Edgar Ashleigh, whose peculiar actions have doubtless been under suspicion many times.

The denouement furnishes a satisfying conclusion, the explanation being that an anthropoid ape, developing a murderous hydrophobia as a result, the ape had been finely placed through out, and contains a good mixture of mystery and excitement.

Tuesday, Larry Bell, Gentleman, the imp comedy drama, will be the vehicle in which delightful Violet Messereau and William Garwood will be featured.

The photodramatic rights for two of the greatest comedy successes ever produced on the American stage, "The Chorus Lady" and "The Traveling Salesman," both by James Forbes and both originally produced under the management of the late Henry B. Harris.

"The Chorus Lady" was the sensation of New York city for several years after its New York hit. The name became a by-word on two continents, and the financial returns on the piece positively broke all records over any comedy producing in recent years.

This play brought James Forbes into the very foremost ranks of American dramatists, establishing his present great reputation, and also did much for the fame and fortune of Henry B. Harris.

The acquisition of the rights of these two comedies is in line with the determination of the Lasky company always to supply its share of the Paramount releases, a certain proportion of very high-class humorous photoplays.

The same spirit of fun which was so skillfully attained in the photodramatic "Snobs," with Victor Moore as the star, has set a standard which the Lasky company not only hopes to maintain but to eclipse in the near future.

Some Striking Scenes in Thrilling Picture Plays Which Will be Shown in Atlanta Houses This Week AT THE MONTGOMERY

(1) Scene from "When Broadway was a Trail," at the Victoria on Wednesday; (2) Victor Moore, in "Chimmie Fadden," at the Grand on Wednesday; (3) Scene from "The Spendthrift," featuring Irene Fenwick, at the Strand Monday.

FOX FILM FEATURES AT THE MONTGOMERY

"Samson," "Kreutzer Sonata," "Clemenceau Case" and "Fool There Was."

The season's most pretentious offerings are booked at the Montgomery this week. Some of the greatest film features, of the famous Fox Office Attraction company brand, will be shown. Henri Bernstein, Alexander Dumas and Count Leo Tolstoy are the noted authors from whose prolific pens adaptations for the screen have been made.

The first to head the list Monday will be "Samson," by the great French dramatist, the author of the play "The Thief" and other well-known plays. This modern drama of passion and finance is a picture of a portion of the famous play, produced by Charles Frohman at the Criterion theater, in New York city. William Farnum, as Samson, and the more Samson, presents one of the most forceful and gripping portrayals in a dramatic story.

Tuesday's feature will be Tolstoy's masterpiece, "Kreutzer Sonata," with "America's" greatest emotional actress, in the leading role, supported by Theda Bara and William E. Shay. Nowhere on earth could an artist more suited by appearance and temperament have been found than Miss O'Neil to play the beautiful character of Katia.

"Kreutzer Sonata" is a photo-play that thrills and pulsates with great emotion. It has an unpassed in dramatic intensity and forms a mighty symphony in human passions and emotions. Tolstoy considered "Kreutzer Sonata" his most significant work in it he mercilessly flays the dissolute creature who through weakness and ambition, does not adhere to strict morality. His idea of modern society as concerns women is similar to that of the feminine of the "Dollars and Cents" found in Stanley Houghton's famed work "Hindle Wakes."

The fourth story of the "Who Pays" series, called "The Love Liars," will be seen Wednesday with Ruth Roland and Henry King in the leading roles.

"The Clemenceau Case" will be featured Thursday and Friday. This drama as pictured for William Fox by Henri Bernstein, director of "Kreutzer Sonata," is one of the most powerful plays ever written. Theda Bara, William E. Shay, and Stuart Holmes offer a splendid interpretation of the characters that make this adaptation from the novel by Alexander Dumas, one of the most interesting.

Passions flare and will clash throughout the production in a way that breathes in his chair, till the last great scene is reached and the well-known story of the "Clemenceau Case" is brought to its tremendous end.

When Alexander Dumas wrote the book "The Three Musketeers" he intended to show that there is a Divine Being who punishes indulgence and rewards the good. He has succeeded in pointing out this in "The Clemenceau Case." I shall have gained my end.

The story of "The Dollars and Cents" will be featured Saturday. The author of "The Fool There Was," by Porter Emerson Browne, a visualization of the famous Kipling poem, "The Vampire," features Theda Bara, who will be the attraction Saturday.

THREE WORLD FILMS AT THE VICTORIA

"Evangeline" Film Version of Longfellow's Beautiful Poem on This Week's Program.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday three World Film releases will be shown at the Victoria. "Evangeline," Longfellow's beautiful poem, "Evangeline," will be featured in film version on Monday. The simple story so beautifully pictured, is one of the most favorable comment.

In the five-act photo play, "Money," the story of a miser's life, an ordinary theme is treated in an out-of-the-ordinary manner. Astonishing in its plot, it presents an unusual excitement. "Money" outlines a plausible condition of affairs in modern society, the action is supposed to take place. The story is of a prophetic type. But the main incidents of "Money" are as feasible in 1915 as in 1825.

The story narrates a bitter struggle between capital and labor, in which the latter is the victor. It is a story which proves that capital is impotent without labor. This picture has been most lavishly produced, and the most interesting scenes are so thoroughly into the spirit of the story that a stirring film is the result. "Evangeline" is the leading role of Hope Ross, the heroine of the story.

The daughter of the "People" booked for Tuesday, is another splendid five-part feature. It is produced by the Grand Art Film company, and directed by the World Film under the direction of J. Seale Dawley.

"The Love Liars" is a series entitled "Who Pays," consisting of twelve plays of undiluted realism, is the tale of a woman who through her husband's fear to tread, and of a senile invalid who thought he wasn't. Born in the province of Holland, in her month, reared in the even more provincial lap of luxury, the lady didn't know what it meant to make a man's love. But the time came when the lady had to choose between dread poverty and a splendid fortune. A program will be shown which only knowledge of youth was a distant memory.

PAVLOVA TO DANCE FOR THE UNIVERSAL

FOR THE UNIVERSAL

Carl Laemmle and George Kann, representing the Universal Film Manufacturing company, and Max Rabino, representing Madame Anna Pavlova, the incomparable classic dancer, last week attached their names to a tremendous contract. Its amount is unprecedented, even in the motion picture industry, where thousands of dollars for salaries of stars are spoken of lightly.

The subject will be the Auber's grand opera, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," presented at the Metropolitan opera house, New York city, twenty-one years ago. This work, strong of plot and rapid of action, will be a splendid vehicle for the wonderful dancer and her collection of artists.

For many months Pavlova persistently refused to consider the offer to appear in the film, and consented only after being assured by the Universal that every means would be employed to make the screen production an artistic success.

The picture will be in eight reels, and orchestral scores and full orchestra will accompany the picture on its tour of the biggest theaters in the world.

THE REGENT THEATER TO OPEN SOON

TO OPEN SOON

The Suburban Amusement company, of which company F. T. Montgomery is at the head, are going rapidly forward with their plans for the opening of a string of moving picture theaters in the residence sections of Atlanta.

The Regent, situated at Peachtree street and North avenue, will be the first to open its doors to the public, which event will be in about ten days.

The Selecta, located at Peachtree and Tenth streets, is also being constructed, and will probably be ready about August 1.

These convenient amusement places will no doubt become very popular with the ladies and children in their respective neighborhoods, affording a splendid method of securing amusement without the trip downtown, as when the chain is completed there will be one accessible to almost any part of the city.

"The Love Liars"

It was the first vampire she had ever played, her previous work being in the light comedy 'The Return of Doctor Mysterio,' the famous 'Jarr' series. FINE PROGRAM AT GRAND THIS WEEK

"Chimmie Fadden," "Sins of the Mothers" and "Little Pal" Present Noted Stars.

The startling success of the Grand theater, and the widespread opinion it has attained in the moving picture world, is to be attributed to the strict policy it has observed of serving the public the biggest and most pretentious of picture productions, the system of comfort it provides each and every patron, and the courteous, skillful service that greets the thousands who enter its doors each day and night.
In accord with the Wells policy originally outlined when the Grand first opened its doors, the management has never failed to serve patrons with any but the biggest photo-drama releases that were put up in the market. At this end they gained control of—and still hold—such monster film combinations as the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selznick-Essanay, World, Paramount, Balboa and other famous booking agencies.
The Grand is one of the coolest theaters in the city, also attractive, comfortably arranged, and commodious.
You are never lonesome at the Grand—neither uncomfortable.
It is the ideal home of "Pretentious Picture Programs."
The program this week is one of the biggest of its career. Monday and Tuesday Victor Moore will appear in "Chimmie Fadden," the stirring Laskey release.
Thursday and Friday comes the Vitagraph masterpiece, "The Sins of the Mothers," a startling film sensation that set Broadway in a dither, and promises to set an attendance record in Atlanta that will have been unacquainted.
Friday and Saturday comes the idol of the screen, the peer of all favorites, Mary Pickford, in "Little Pal," her most noteworthy vehicle.
It is the Bowery of those days, some twenty-five years ago, that is pictured in Jesse L. Lasky's production of E. W. Townsend's world-famous comedy, "Chimmie Fadden," who is now a United States congressman from New Jersey, was at that time a star reporter of The New York Sun. Every day and then he wrote a "Chimmie Fadden" sketch, telling incidents in the life of Irish-American Bowery boys.
"Chimmie Fadden" is not only a scintillatingly funny film, but veritably a historical record of what was once one of the most famous "American Boweries."
"The Sins of the Mothers" won the $10,000 prize scenario contest run by The New York Sun. It has no equal as a moral lesson. It deals with an inherited vice—the passion of gambling, which is found to exist in the beautiful young daughter, who, upon leaving the convent in which she has been reared, discovers that she has a mania for the races, the roulette table—all games of chance.
It is thrilling, sensational, stunning and in the hands of the great American actress, Earle Williams, Ralph Ince, the direction by which staged under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton.
"Little Pal" provides Mary Pickford with one of the most unique roles in which she has ever been presented. The photoplay is one of primitive emotions and primal passions, and evinces a hit-or-miss, uncalculated aspect of Mary Pickford's astounding versatility.
Jacques Jaccard has completed the production of his first picture since returning to Universal City, "Be a Father," the title of the comedy drama, written by John Fleming Wilson, is a story of the sea, as are so many of Mr. Wilson's, and in it there is plenty of range for good comedy. Buddy Mackey, of E. Yeamans Titus, Val Paul, Clarence Burton, Doc Crane, and Doris Pawn play the leading roles.

THEDA BARA

Celebrated actress who portrays leading parts in "The Clemenceau Case," and "A Fool There Was" at the Montgomery this week.

Marie Tempest.

Marie Tempest, the famous London actress, has signed a contract to appear in a big Universal film feature. This is but another in the long list of well-known celebrities who have left the glare of the footlights to play for the silent drama.
Miss Tempest commenced her career as a musical student and played in the Paris Opera Comique some years ago. Since then she has starred in many comic operas and finally gave up the singing stage to become one of the foremost comedienne of the present day.
This clever actress has to her credit the starring roles in nearly fifty big successes, her biggest hits being "Kitty Carroll" in "The Red Hussar," Nell Gwyn in "English Nell," Polly Koles in a revival of "Caste," Kitty Silverton in "The Marriage of Kitty," Peggy O'Mara in "All of a Sudden Peggy," Becky Sharp in "Vanity Fair," and in the all-star revival of "London Assurance," given in aid of King George Actors' Pension Fund, in London.
Since renouncing musical plays, Marie Tempest has won fame and distinction as one of the leading comedienne on the English stage, and the Universal are to be congratulated on their good fortune in securing such an artist for their program.

"THE CHEVAL MYSTERY" WEDNESDAY AT SAVOY

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby Featured Drama of Hypnotism and Mystery.

Splendid features are on the program at the Savoy the coming week. Chief among the good things offered is the great photo-play, "The Cheval Mystery," the story of a crime supposed to be committed by Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby. The fifteenth and concluding episode of the Universal special feature Monday "The Black Box," will be seen at the Savoy this week. The story of the startling disclosure that Professor Owen, the apparently harmless old scientist, has been a veritable Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, and all the crimes supposed to be committed by him were in reality the professor's handiwork.
"The Cheval Mystery," the fifth episode in the "Under the Crescent" series, will be shown in all its jaw-dropping and awe-inspiring scenes, and the magnificent visualizations of Egyptian life are becoming more and more absorbing. The episode the sumptuousness and the magnificence of these superb photo-films is unexcelled. The progress of the Egyptian princess towards freedom is still retarded by adventures that are as plausible and as realistic as they are picturesque.
"The Cheval Mystery" for Wednesday, featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, is said to equal any photoplay put out by the big "U." It presents a murder mystery, with the opening scenes show the body of a man lying in the woods murdered. The girl is accused of the murder, but it later develops that her uncle, who is a hypnotist of the Esenka type, asserts an hypnotic influence over her, and she is made to act according to his directions. The situations that lead up to the climax are so gripping and so intense that the audience spellbound, there is never a lagging moment. The great interest is solved in a feasible manner and this drama of exciting interest grips the audience until the final picture fades from view.

HART'S MIGHTY FIST KNOCKS THEM OUT

William S. Hart's mighty fist again dealt a blow to one of the biggest men recently when the noted actor of the New York Motion Picture corporation was sent to the part of Dakota Dan in "Fools of Providence," a two-reel Broncho release of the Mutual picture in which he is the star. As a husky westerner insults the daughter of a minister who agrees to lend her to the New York Motion Picture corporation, Hart's mighty fist is sent to the ground. The tough one was being interpreted by Edward Kenny, a mammoth youth weighing more than 200 pounds. Then, according to the story, punches the minister with a beating. Hart wanted to know if the minister was a feasible character. He is not crusty, crab nor has he any intention of doing this bachelor stuff.
The "Lady Raffles and Detective Duck" stories are so good that they are being run as the first number by the Strand theater in New York. This is considered the criterion of merit.

After much negotiation, Bert Adler, manager of the Coyoteville Universal studio, succeeded in gaining the consent of "Oscar" the famous manager of the Waldorf Astoria, to film some important scenes in the "Earl of Sallow" in which Lawrence O'Grady is playing the leading role. The famous hostelry plays an important part in the plan and a great amount of realism will be injected into the film version by using the hotel proper for the settings.

"THE ETERNAL CITY"

At the Montgomery Week of July 5.

The management of the Montgomery theater announces the entire week beginning July 5, the photo spectacle, "The Eternal City," with Pauline Frederick.
It is the most pretentious subject ever produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Company. It represents the first time that a prominent actress has been given a serial abroad by a film producing company for the production of a motion picture.
The director, Edwin S. Porter, who produced the first dramatic story in a screen drama, "The Birth of a Nation," in collaboration with Hugh Ford, the noted stage director, whose first film experience was in the production of "The Sign of the Cross," in the history of the motion picture that the Vatican gardens, the coliseum, the Castle of St. Peter, the Colosseum and other historic spots in the imperial city have been used as settings for a screen drama.
A regiment of the Italian army, or an actual military body of any Government, was loaned to motion picture producers as film actors in a screen drama.
Added to the beauty of the subject is the vital, timely interest derived from the fact that many of the ancient and historic buildings that were injured by the disastrous fire of 1883, and the background of the screen production of Hall Caine's stirring romance, "The Two Admirals," which was first produced explicitly required from all exhibitors an iron-clad contract which states that the picture is to be shown at a price less than 25 cents.

BIG MOVIE COMPANY HAS NARROW ESCAPE

The Henry McRae company of 101-Bison (Universal) players has returned to Universal City from the Santa Barbara Islands with several thrilling tales of adventure, shipwreck and hardship. The Universal recently paid $1500 for the wreck of the Norwegian steamer "Aegle" and the crew and passengers of the Santa Barbara Islands. The owners of the vessel put the vessel on the stocks and the crew and passengers jumped at the chance to film some feature productions around the steamer, depicting the Bison players as once to the Santa Barbara Islands.
The company arrived at the islands only to find that news was breaking over the ship and slowly pounding her to pieces.
Early in the morning it was seen that the heavy seas were abating and Director McRae loaded up a launch with the Bison players and the camera crew and the party in his boat, comprising the Bison company, Don Deane and Curley Stecker, were washed out of reach of the others and drifted to a safe anchorage about 200 miles away where they were forced to land and bail out their boat. It was two days before they were able to make their way back against wind and waves to the wreck.
The crew and some of the less adventurous of the players were taking a number of scenes along the coast and the Bison players were in the cove. Director McRae and his party went aboard the liner and secured some of the most realistic scenes of a sinking ship ever taken. Although the boat threatened to founder at any moment, Director McRae and the cameraman went down into the hold of the vessel where, under the sunlight streaming in through the open hatch, a drama, half of real life and half of real life, was enacted before the camera's lone eye.
Henry King, co-star with Ruth Roland in "Who Pays?" is busy working on "A Gentleman's Agreement," a moving picture within a moving picture, quite a novel. Ruth Roland is also in the exposition city, enjoying her two weeks' vacation, after which she and Henry King started.

"The Imposters."

The next picture to be produced at the World Film studios by M. Albert Capellan is "The Imposters." Mr. Capellan has just completed "The Face in the Moonlight," which was prominently associated on the speaking stage with Robert Mantell, and in the picture version of which Robert Warwick plays the dual stellar role.
"The Imposters" is taken from the play of the same name by Douglas Murray, which was successfully performed in the speaking stage by Miss Jose Collins, the famous singer and actress, enacts the part of the spy, "The Tears" is Miss Collins' first appearance before the camera and experts say her tests show her to be as charming on the screen as on the stage.
Mr. Alec B. Francis will be featured and will play the dual part of Sir Anthony Gregson, the Cussy old Irish nobleman and his wayward twin brother, known as "Blink."
Miss Dorothy Fairchild, who will be remembered for her appealing work as the wife of Porkey McCoy in "The Boss in White," Hobbrook Blinn and Alire Brady are starred, portrays the ingenious role of Mary.

"The Cannon Ball" is the latest Keystone picture, and it is a knockout, according to advices received from Mack Sennett. It simply out-Keystones any Keystone that has ever mortared together. In it a big concrete bridge is dynamited.

The sixth and last episode of the Princess Haasan "Under the Crescent" series is called "The Crown of Death," and is by far the most exciting and satisfactory of the entire Universal series.

"Who Pays?"

Continues to be the most-talked-of series of feature subjects from the Maine coast to the Golden Gate.

Housekeepers & Hotel Men Attention! Here Are 338 Dozen Bath Towels & Mats at

THESE are the identical numbers in bath towels and mats that we sell every day at full prices. This lot comes to us under price because they are the mill's accumulation of "seconds"—towels with a slight oil spot, a dropped thread, an uneven border or other slight mar. Nothing to hurt—a towel expert would be often puzzled to find a flaw. The bath mats are in colors; the towels are all white. An exact analysis of the 338 dozen divides the towels and mats thus:

TEUTON VICTORIES IMPRESS BALKANS

Greece and Rumania Not So Eager to Enter War in Behalf of Allies—Rumania to Disband Part of Army.

Berlin, June 25—(Via London)—An Athens dispatch to The Mitting Zeitung says:

"Ex-Premier Venizelos, of Greece, intended to decline the offer of membership if it is tendered to him because of the friendly attitude displayed by the entente powers toward Bulgaria. He is willing that the government remain on other hands friendly to the Austro-German alliance. It is assumed that the most recent military developments together with the policy of the entente powers have convinced Mr. Venizelos that his proposed policy of four months ago is no longer tenable."

"It is further asserted that the ex-premier has prepared a memorandum for King Constantine urging him to sound Greece regarding her policy toward Greece. The capture of Lemnos has made a marked impression upon Athens. Newspapers here regard the positions of the Russian army as precarious."

Gouarais for Neutrality.

"Recent developments justify the maintenance for the present of the government's policy of neutrality," is a statement attributed to Premier Gouarais, of Greece, by the Athens correspondent of The Tagblatt, who interviewed him regarding the situation in Greece. The question of recognizing the cabinet, Mr. Gouarais said, must hinge on the balance between the open claims of King Constantine, but that his majesty's physicians believed he would be able to open parliament July 20.

Taking up the foreign policy of Greece the premier is quoted as saying that her alliance with Serbia and Rumania to maintain an especially friendly attitude toward that country. Referring to King Constantine, he said according to The Tagblatt:

"Italy's national aims in Albania and Asia Minor are mainly in the interests of Greece but it would be vastly different if Italy tried to lay her hands upon regions in which Greece constitutes the major part of the population."

RUMANIA HALTS ABOUT ENTERING WAR.

Berlin, June 25—(Via London)—The correspondent of The Mitting Zeitung at Bucharest says the Rumanian cabinet has voted to disband part of the army and give the soldiers long furloughs. This action was taken, it was stated, at the instance of the premier and minister of war, Mr. Bratianu, who expressed his relations with Russia would require a long time.

Washington, June 25—Reports that part of the Rumanian army has been released from the front in the Balkans because of delay in negotiations with Russia over Rumanian participation in the war, served to call the attention of diplomats here to reports that Rumania is short of war munitions. Some diplomats believe that recent Austro-German successes in Galicia have impressed the Rumanian government with a desire to move slowly and that at the end of the war, Rumania will join the allies.

BULGARIA FAILS TO AGREE WITH TURKEY.

London, June 27—(2:04 a. m.)—Hull is president of the Turkish cabinet according to a special dispatch from Sofia. Bulgaria has left that city, however, he observed, without concluding an agreement regarding Bulgaria's attitude in the war. Negotiations between Rumania and Bulgaria on the same subject are proceeding.

1,000 IMPORTERS PROTEST BLOCKADE

At this time, but it is known he finally resolved to wait for the German answer to the last note concerning submarine warfare. He did not wish it is understood, to give the appearance abroad that the United States would bargain by negotiations with England on the blockade question for concessions by Germany demanded as a result of the sinking of the Lusitania. Reparation for the loss of more than 100 American lives, the president has held must constitute a separate and distinct issue.

Germany Will Take Advantage.

It is thought certain in diplomatic quarters here that Germany will in her next note take advantage of the invitation of the United States to submit suggestions for a modus vivendi to the allies whereby submarine warfare might be suspended. If the so-called blockade of commerce through neutral countries were dropped and restrictions removed on the shipment of foodstuffs.

Before a note is sent, however, covering all the points in the order of council, it is considered possible that the statement of the American Importers will be transmitted to Ambassador Page for presentation to the British foreign office in order that Great Britain may appreciate the growing interest of American merchants. The importers' petition follows the argument made by the United States in its previous note to Great Britain, but points out, in addition to the submarine blockade of the German coast is not "effective" since Sweden can trade freely with German ports. The test of the validity of a blockade is its effectiveness, and the importers declare that the citizens of the United States should have the same right as those of Sweden.

After the conference counsel for the importers issued a statement saying Secretary Lansing had expressed a determination on the part of President Wilson and himself to do all in their power to aid.

What Lansing Said.

"The secretary of state," said the statement, "asked questions, evincing a study and thorough knowledge of the conditions that have seriously interfered with the business of American merchants by reason of the unwarranted delay of the shipment in over-seas transportation of American-owned merchandise."

"The secretary expressed a determination on the part of both the president and himself to do all in their power to aid the injured citizens of the United States in securing the rights to which they are entitled under the laws of nations and by treaty obligations, and expressed his full sympathy with the importers in the present unfortunate state, and, without committing himself, gave the committee to understand that they might expect some favorable action on the part of the foreign nations in response to the state department's representations."

United States." The petition addressed to President Wilson discusses at length issues of international law involved, and urges on the president "the need for a very early determination of these issues so that we may know whether we will be able to conduct our established business."

Great Britain, the petition says, "has studiously avoided" answering the American note of March 30, in which the position of the Washington government in regard to the blockade measures was set forth, "and nearly three months of valuable time in which it was necessary for us to prepare for our coming business, have passed."

"Notwithstanding this declaration of the British government does not follow from any declared and maintained blockade of German territory," the petition says, "we have been unable to induce any steamship companies to carry out goods, American property, either from unblockaded German ports or from neutral ports to which the goods have been conveyed by means of internal land communication. The mere fact that Great Britain does not threaten to suspend its trade with our goods if the same shipped does not concern us, because, first, we cannot get them shipped, and secondly, because we are interested in the much greater question of lawfully obtaining an uninterrupted supply of our American products to England was a likely step in retaliation for British interference with neutral trade."

Not Compensated by Payment.

We are not compensated by a payment for a particular cargo after legal proceedings in the British courts, for the goods have been sold in the established trade of this country and preventing a sacrifice of American capital.

During 1914 and the early part of this year we placed in large contracts for merchandise to be manufactured in Germany and Austria. We have obligated ourselves to take this merchandise and pay for it. A considerable portion of such merchandise is finished and ready for shipment, the manufacturers are demanding payment for the same. We are in the quandary of having to pay for our merchandise and at the same time being unable to have sold much of this merchandise to American business houses to whom we are now responsible for the delivery of such goods.

The concession of the British government that it will not allow goods as have been paid for prior to March 1 is of no avail to us. The goods are still in the hands of American houses enjoying a good credit in general do not have to pay for their merchandise until it is delivered. We are doing that the British requirement that shipment must be effected prior to June 15 is a serious obstacle to our business.

No Effective Blockade.

"With all deference to your excellency, the document continues, who we know has at heart the protection of American commerce we respectfully call attention to the urgency of the situation and the pressing necessity of our knowing very soon whether we will be able to conduct our lawful business under the protection of well established principles of law upon which we have always relied, and which have been so ably and aptly pointed out by the state department in its diplomatic correspondence with Great Britain."

We maintain that since a Swedish merchant can ship to a German port we also as citizens of this country have the same right and that these facts convincingly prove that there is no effective blockade of nearly the entire German coast.

The importers appeal to the president not to ship to a German port, but on grounds that "the only prospect for peace is an instance of those unquestioned guarantees which have been won from the belligerent powers under the leadership of these free United States of America."

"We are proud as citizens of this country that these United States have ever led in the world in the protection of rights says the petition "and for the safeguards due to neutrals not employed in war should be added to our own excellencies to firmly insist that the illegitimate pretensions of the warring countries do not extend beyond the narrow exceptions already engrafted upon the principles of international law."

NO EMBARGO CONSIDERED.

Washington, June 25—The United States is not considering an embargo at present on shipments to any belligerent country. This was stated today by the state department as a result of published reports that an embargo on all shipments of American products to England was a likely step in retaliation for British interference with neutral trade.

MANY PROTESTS CAUSED BY NEW SEAMEN'S LAW

Washington, June 25—The United States may face a general protest from foreign governments whose treaties with this country are contravened by the new seamen's law according to belief expressed here today by some European diplomats.

The notification that sections of treaties conflicting with the new law would be null and void at the expiration of the required time—one year—has brought no official answer to the state department. The law, however, has been in force several important points have indicated that their governments will not agree. They object to the new law in that it is sustained by the general principles of international law governing the rights of citizens on ships under their own flag.

The chief obstacle that American diplomacy must overcome it is pointed out, is presented in the 1910 consular convention signed between this country and Sweden in 1910. Within this time the United States is bound to respect the privileges and rights of Swedish consuls and Swedish shipmasters as outlined in the pact. All Sweden yields her rights, which is doubted in diplomatic quarters here all the other countries in the world in relation with this country are protected by the favored-nations clause can claim the same treatment as that assured by the Swedish convention.

The United States has indicated that it does not wish the remainder of the world to become a bid as they naturally would under these conditions.

Strike Is Ended.

Pittsburg, Kan., June 25—Operations were resumed at the two local smelter plants today when the greater part of the furnace men who have been on strike returned to work. All the men employed by the Pittsburg Zinc company reached an agreement with their employers. The Joplin Ore and smelting company resumed operations with a partial force at work.

"MOONSHINE" FRAUDS PROBED BY GOVERNMENT

It is Alleged That the United States Has Lost Thousands of Dollars.

Fort Smith, Ark., June 25—Interest in the alleged "moonshine" whisky frauds, through which the government was said to have lost many thousands of dollars, centered today in the hearing of a suit in federal court here questioning the right of the United States to seize letters from the Kansas City, Mo., office of the Bush Distilling company.

The suit was brought by John L. Casper, head of the company, who, with a number of alleged business associates, was indicted by a federal grand jury here this week, charged with various violations of the internal revenue laws.

A part of the information on which the indictments were based, was said to have been contained in correspondence taken by federal officers in a raid on the Kansas City office of the company. Casper alleged the seizure of the documents was against the constitution. His attorneys asserted that the correspondence was taken from a place which was not alleged by the government to be an illegal institution.

J. V. Bourland, United States district attorney, declared the correspondence was in the possession of Kansas City federal officers, through whose courtesy the documents were permitted to be used by the grand jury. Judge Frank A. Youmans took the case under advisement.

The grand jury made no further report today and an indictment returned and withheld yesterday was not made public. The jury is expected to make a full report Monday.

Buick 1916 Buick

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Public Wants Buick Sixes—So Many of Them That We Shall Build Nothing Else in 1916

More enduring than chrome vanadium steel, more wonderful than the finest workmanship, is the idea that can dominate an industry.

In this day when more Buicks are being built than ever before it is interesting to remember that the distinguishing characteristic of the Buick, the Valve-in-Head Motor, has existed as an idea for twenty-five years and been built into Buick cars for thirteen years.

From 1903 to 1907 the Buick Valve-in-Head was a two-cylinder engine. From 1908 to 1914 four cylinders dominated the field and the Buick Valve-in-Head Four dominated other types. The Buick Valve-in-Head Six was first put on the market in 1913. Fours were also continued—but the Valve-in-Head Six had stirred the imagination of the car-buying public. The demand from the start outpaced the production.

This demand has become so overwhelming that now—for 1916—the Four gives way to Sixes. Two chassis, both Sixes, with roadster, touring car, coupe, sedan bodies. The Six has been made standard because in the Six the Valve-in-Head idea has its greatest opportunity for service. Also since the first appearance of the Buick Six there has arisen an insistent demand for smaller Buick Sixes.

On the smaller of the two Buick chassis for 1916 there are four body models, thus offering a complete range in both open and closed cars, and for both individual and family use. This smaller Buick roadster, introduced this season, is the companion car to the touring model illustrated above. It is magnificent in appointment and finish, with a 45-horsepower, six-cylinder, smooth, vibrationless, Valve-in-Head Motor. It offers the greatest possible motor value to those who desire a handsome roadster. It sets a new standard of automobile value, and one by which all nineteen-sixteen cars will be judged.

Buick Valve-in-Head Six-Cylinder Roadster, Model D-54 $1540
Price, completely equipped, f. o. b. Atlanta

This roadster is the successor to the "Big Six" Buick Roadster which created such a stir in the motor world last season. It is built on the same chassis as the seven-passenger Touring Car, with Valve-in-Head motor of 55 horsepower, and in both construction and appearance will rank with any car at any price.

Model D-45 Buick Valve-in-Head Six-Cylinder Touring Car $1050
Price, completely equipped, f. o. b. Atlanta

The car about which everybody is talking when they think of motor cars. The car that will inspire the utmost pride of ownership. The car we know is right, not only in theory and test, but in actual service.

Buick Valve-in-Head Seven-Passenger, Six-Cylinder Touring Car, Model D-55. Price, completely equipped, f. o. b. Atlanta $1575

This, the third season for this model of the Buick, finds Buick ideals in motor car manufacture and Buick Valve-in-Head principle of motor construction brought to their highest development and refinement. In this car are combined all the essentials for perfect motoring pleasure. First, there is that abundance of power which only the Buick Valve-in-Head Motor insures. Then there is a grace of line and finish which stamp this car as a motor car beauty. Buick construction insures the utmost of "under the floor" value in workmanship and material. Nothing is lacking to make this car ideal from every possible viewpoint.

DEVELOPMENT NOT "A BUBBLE OR A DREAM"

In the transformation of a mountain wilderness into a metropolis, when the rugged peak of the Piedmont became the great city of Atlanta, many magic-like changes took place, and from time to time sections of the city that were obscure and little known suddenly became either live business centers or beautiful home parks.

But in all this wonderful development, there has probably been none that has equaled the marvelous changes that have taken place in what is known as the "Terminal Section."

By the "Terminal Section" is meant that part of the city adjacent to the new Terminal Station. In it can be included the business section along the following streets:

West Mitchell from Broad street to Madison avenue; Broad street from West Hunter to West Mitchell; West Hunter from Broad street to Madison avenue; Madison avenue from West Hunter to Peters street; Nelson street from Madison avenue to Forsyth street; Forsyth street from West Hunter to Peters street.

Home Sites of Pioneers.

Many years ago this section was occupied by some of the homes of pioneers. The two blocks bounded by Madison avenue, Peters, Forsyth and Nelson streets and by Nelson, Madison avenue, Forsyth and Mitchell streets was once the site of the old Inman home. It was the extension of Nelson street through this property and the erection of many fine stores by the late Sam M. Inman that did more than any other factor to develop the "Terminal Section."

Of course, it was the building of the Terminal Station that brought about the wonderful change in that part of the city. No sooner had it become known that the new Terminal Station was to be built on its present site than real estate on surrounding blocks jumped up in value. A few of the wise ones had secured options and some well authenticated stories have been told about small fortunes having been made.

Before Developments Began.

Before the Terminal Station was built Madison avenue was known as Thompson street and it was scarcely more than a back alley filled with old shacks and inhabited by worthless whites and negroes. Alabama street from Forsyth to Madison avenue was not much better. Forsyth street between Hunter and Mitchell was not considered in the business class. Mitchell between Broad and Madison avenue was occupied by cheap stores and shoddy lodging houses. There was no Nelson street between Madison avenue and Forsyth street.

The entire section was outside of the business district and real estate values were as low as anywhere in the city.

Then came the wonderful change. The Terminal Station was built. Immediately the old structures in that section were torn down and the erection of large buildings was begun.

Now, where there had been old shacks and vacant lots, there are some of the finest business houses in the city, including retail and wholesale houses, hotels and manufactories.

The business center of Atlanta was moved westward when an almost deserted area was transformed into a stirring, moving and hustling mart of busy business men.

Not Even Fires Could Stop It.

Not even a great conflagration could stop the remarkable development. One of the most disastrous fires that ever occurred in Atlanta swept over the Terminal Section a few years ago and many of the finest buildings were reduced to smoldering ruins; but not for long did the wreck remain, for immediately the debris was cleared away and new buildings, even more costly than the others, were erected.

That was like Atlanta, it was pointed out—always rising higher when the torch tried to work a ruin—as was the case when Sherman's army became a little too careless with fire back in the sixties. On the city's seal is the Phoenix rising from the ashes, and when the fire came into the Terminal Section once more did the city rise like the Phoenix.

Nothing could have emphasized more the permanent development of that part of the city than did that fire.

It has been estimated at the city tax office that within the past fifteen years real estate in the Terminal Section has increased about 800 per cent. That means that a piece of property which was worth $1,000 fifteen years ago is worth today $1,000,000. Looks a little like an Aladdin and his wonderful lamp proposition, doesn't it? But it is nevertheless true. Can any other city in the south show such a wonderful development of any part of its territory?

Many Leading Business Houses.

Take any one of the streets in that section, Forsyth, Mitchell, Madison, Nelson, Broad or Hunter, and you will find there some of the leading business houses of Atlanta. That men with an eye to business should locate there is ample proof that an almost disused section of Atlanta has become a business center. And these merchants and business men are prospering. They are where they can command a good trade and they are taking advantage of it.

The railroads, knowing what a change was to be made of the Terminal Section, were quick to improve their terminal facilities and have erected large and up-to-date freight depots.

It is a wonderful story that the Terminal Section tells of a growing city's prosperity, and the best of it is that it is not a "bubble or a dream," but a great reality that redounds to the credit and glory of the Gate City of the South.

TERMINAL SECTION TRADE IS GROWING

Now Has Ninety-Three
Mercantile Establishments, Eight Hotels, Six Manufactories and Three Cafes.

Ninety-three mercantile establishments, eight hotels, six manufactories and three cafes.

That is the business showing today of a section of Atlanta that only a few years ago had shacks and shanties and unpaved streets. That section is the Terminal district.

If that isn't development, then there is no such word in the business vocabulary or mercantile lexicon.

Take West Mitchell from Broad street to Madison avenue. Along that thoroughfare for the two blocks you will find 49 mercantile establishments, three hotels, two cafes and a reality company.

On Madison avenue, from West Hunter to Peters street, there are four hotels, ten mercantile houses, one cafe, two freight depots and one of the largest bakeries and candy manufactories in the south.

Business in Terminal Section.
On Nelson street on the block from

WALTER J. WOOD

Forsyth street to Madison avenue there are four of the leading wholesale concerns in the city.

On Broad street between Mitchell and Hunter streets there are 14 mercantile houses.

On Forsyth street between West Hunter and Nelson streets there are 15 mercantile establishments, one hotel and a social club.

All of this in a section of the city that was fifteen years ago hardly on the municipal map.

In this section you can find every branch of trade. It is a business district to itself and one can do a day's shopping and buy everything wanted without leaving its confines.

What speaks well for the Terminal section in a business way is the fact that it contains no cheap or shoddy stores.

For over forty years there stood on West Mitchell street, near Thompson street, now Madison avenue, a two-story frame house, said to have been just after the war the home of an Atlanta pioneer. From 1885 to 1895 it was used as a boarding house. Then it fell into disrepair and became a very cheap lodging house. When the Terminal revolution took place a brick store was built adjacent to the old lodging house and one day the excavations caused the house to totter and tumble.

Scene Was Typical.

The scene was typical of what has taken place on all the streets in the Terminal section. Old ramshackle houses were made to tumble to give place to modern and up-to-date stores and hotels.

And what is more, the improvements in that section are not at a standstill; but developments continue. Trade continues to improve and traffic increases.

What is to be the future of this part of Atlanta no one can say, but it seems certain that it will keep on improving and developing, as the whole city grows. It seems destined to always hold a place among the prosperous sections of Atlanta.

DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUSINESS COLLEGES

ATLANTA, GA.
Cor. Mitchell and Forsyth Sts.

25 Years Successful Operation

Which Would You Rather Do?

Go to school and confine yourself to dry text-books learning, thereby limiting your education not only to theory, but to limited book knowledge?

OR, attend DRAUGHON'S, which is more like taking a trip through some of the largest and most modern business offices, to secure your business and shorthand education? It is not like going to school at all—more like sitting alongside of the business man's desk—learning his methods—getting the benefit of his keen insight into the very business transactions he has to contend with every day.

This is one of the many advantages of pursuing a course at DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUSINESS COLLEGE. Can you imagine anything more practical? Do you appreciate the full meaning of learning shorthand, typewriting, bookkeeping, banking, commercial law, penmanship, etc., in such a business-like manner?

This practical and personal instruction is the primary reason why Draughon graduates secure better positions and command larger salaries than graduates of other schools. This is why a beaten path leads to the College door.

It Is a Fact

That there are two classes of business colleges in the south—DRAUGHON'S and others; you have your choice.

That Draughon's Practical Business College stands supreme, above, before, beyond any other business college in America. It is the very acme of business training efficiency.

That to do life's work the best, you need the DRAUGHON TRAINING—no price is too high to pay for it—no price can compensate for the lack of it—the opportunity is yours—DECIDE TODAY.

HOME OF DRAUGHON'S COLLEGE, ATLANTA, GA.

THE AGGREGATE annual income of the graduates of DRAUGHON'S great chain of Colleges, at an estimated average salary of $75 a month, is ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY MILLION DOLLARS.

Opportunity

The door of OPPORTUNITY swings both ways. One side is labeled "Push;" the other, "Pull." Whether you enter from the "Push" side or from the "Pull" side, and whether you work on the farm, in the shop, or in business, you will, every day, need BUSINESS TRAINING. That's what the Draughon Training is—BUSINESS TRAINING.

How He Built a Fortune

One of the most successful men of America, when asked as to the chief thing to which he attributed his success, replied: "I built my fortune on the dial of my watch. Seconds became pennies; minutes became dimes; hours became dollars. I never PROCRASTINATED; I never waited for other people to get ahead of me. I don't know that there is any particular rule or law of success, but I'm pretty sure that one of the foundation principles is, 'DO IT NOW.'"

Shakespeare Says:

"There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." Will you launch your boat on the swell of that tide and be carried forward with it, or will you wait until it has passed and be swamped in the undertow?

You should be receiving a salary of from $800 to $1,000 one year from this date, and two years from now you should be drawing a salary of from $1,000 to $2,000. Make a note of this assertion. Two years from now pass judgment on yourself, but don't plead the excuse, "I didn't know."

You can, under our direction, begin a plan of action which will absolutely force the business world to deliver to you One Thousand Dollars or more each year in return for your services. Will you begin that plan of action today by purchasing a scholarship in DRAUGHON'S—America's greatest business schools?

Mr. Robinson says: When my mother decided to give me a business education, we made a thorough investigation of the different Business Colleges, and it is a source of great pleasure to me now that we selected Draughon's, in preference to all others. After six months' study in bookkeeping and shorthand combined, I accepted a position as stenographer, where there are two other Draughon graduates employed, with the Ragan-Malone Company, Atlanta, one of the largest wholesale dry goods houses in the south, where, as far as I know, I am giving entire satisfaction.

Miss Pearl Brown says: "When I decided to take a business course, I was at a loss to know where to enroll, but on investigating, I readily decided on Draughon's. On the completing of my course the college secured me a position as stenographer with the National Life Association, Atlanta, at an attractive salary, and I have since been made secretary and treasurer. I give Draughon's College, with its thorough training and able instructors, credit for my success."

Terminal Section Has Had Most Interesting History

There stands on an elevated site, just west of the railroads and near the Terminal station, the old Collier home, of colonial style and built before the war.

On the front porch of the old home there sat for many days John W. Collier, one of the foremost among the pioneers of Atlanta. From that porch he viewed many changes in what is now the Terminal section of Atlanta. He marveled then at what was going on, but if he lived today he would marvel more. He would see the Terminal station, new freight depots and long rows of fine buildings, where, in his time, were only cottages or open fields.

The development of the Terminal section recalls other changes that have taken place in and around Atlanta, and brings up reminiscences of which the old-timers have spoken.

Atlanta in 1838.

"When I arrived in this place in 1839 the country was entirely covered by forests. There was but one house here at that time, and that stood where the old postoffice was formerly located. It was built of logs and was occupied by an old woman and her daughter. I found also a man by the name of Thurman living nearby. I went to work and built a small store. First one moved from the country and then another, until we thought we had a right smart little town. The people around here were very poor. There were a great many of the women who had no shoes at all. We had dirt floors in our homes.

"As the place grew up the present Whitehall street was the place for drinking and fighting. I sold out and went to Griffin, but returned in 1844 and went into business on Marietta street. At that time Jonathan Norcross had a horse savant which was regarded as a curiosity, and people came for many miles just to look at it. The first event of importance was the attempt to incorporate the town. A charter was procured, but some of us objected to the laws that were spoken of. We paid a lawyer $50 to bust up the whole thing, and we went along without a charter. In 1846 we got together, had the town incorporated and named it Marthasville.

A Lot in Terminal Section.

Now here comes a bit of history about a lot in the present Terminal section of the city.

"At one time," stated Mr. Thrasher, "while I was absent from the town, my brother-in-law bought a piece of land 30 feet long running back 100 feet, between Mitchell and Hunter streets next to Jones building, for $30. I was very much provoked when I heard of it, for I had previously refused to give $2 an acre for the same land, and he had given it at the rate of $2 a foot for it. A little while after that he sold the same land for $90, and I told him the fools were not all dead yet, and never to buy another piece of property in Atlanta by the foot."

The piece of property referred to by Mr. Thrasher is now worth $25,000.

Mr. Thrasher mentioned that the lot on which is located the Kimball house once sold at auction for $25.

Here is what H. C. Holcombe, another old pioneer, had to say:

"In the year 1844 I was in Atlanta, then Marthasville, and found only a few small houses on Decatur street, opposite the site of the Kimball house, two or three on Kille's corner (Five Points), and some few scattering shanties at other points. There were no railroads at that time.

250 People in 1847.

"In 1847, on the 4th day of May, the population of Atlanta was 250. The grounds on which stand the depot of the state road was covered with a forest of sturdy oaks. In the midst of the forest was a marsh where grew cane and reeds. Cows often mixed up in the marsh. The place has been built up, for it was 30 feet lower than at present. There were but two houses on Alabama street.

In this connection, while speaking of the Terminal district, it might be interesting to tell how the streets in that section were named.

Broad street was so named because it was at that time the widest street in the city.

Madison avenue was named for Nelson street was named for a pioneer. So was Mitchell street.

NICOLSON TO SERVE IN PARIS HOSPITAL

Has Been Chosen for Interns Service in the American Hospital.

William Perrin Nicolson, Jr., well-known young Atlanta man, who is in his fourth year at Columbia university, sailed from New York Saturday for Bordeaux, France, and will later go to Paris, according to a telegram received by his father, Dr. William Perrin Nicolson, Sr.

Mr. Nicolson was recently chosen for intern service in the American military hospital, at Paris. This institution is said to be doing a great work for wounded soldiers, and many American physicians are now seeing service there.

When the war began last summer Mr. Nicolson was in Germany pursuing special studies, and he is not unfamiliar with the service he will enter. He will be in Paris until October, and, if conditions warrant, will remain until Christmas.

For the past five years under the personal supervision of Professor H. R. Todd himself a graduate many years ago from one of its branches, assisted by a corps of able instructors, themselves being specially trained, the Atlanta college has made splendid progress in its work of training and fitting young men and women of this section for the business duties of life.

Monday Is Give-Away Day
At Mitchell Street Stores

Give-away day, what can it mean? Inquiries have come from every direction the first week to The Constitution as to what it was and when it was to be. Well the secret's out tomorrow in our "Give-Away Day" Merchants in the Terminal district have built up Mitchell street from a few small stores until at the present day it is lined from Whitehall to the Terminal station with large department stores and big retail establishments. These merchants believe that there are many residents in Atlanta who do not realize to what extent this thoroughfare has grown. In order to stimulate interest in this section, they have decided upon tomorrow, Monday, June 28, as "Give-Away Day." Every merchant on the street will participate in the distribution. Souvenirs will be presented by many of the stores to all who call. Others will offer merchandise at give-away prices.

Anyhow, a big crowd is expected and preparations made to accommodate all who can crowd into the stores.

In addition to the list on a portion of the paper is devoted to photographs of the district and information regarding the numerous houses there. Advertisements telling of the many and varied bargains to be had tomorrow will also be found in this section.

Send you to join the throngs who journey to West Mitchell street tomorrow, "Give-Away Day."

GA. AGRICULTURISTS TO MEET AT MOULTRIE

Waycross, Ga., June 26.—(Special)—The annual convention of the Georgia State Agricultural Society will be held at Moultrie on the 11th and 12th of August. Judge John A. Cobb of Americus, president, is now securing speakers for the occasion.

The initial organization year of this society was in 1910. In 1914 it took on a new form of life and projected and conducted the first of a long series of six fairs at Stone Mountain in 1914. The society has clung steadfastly to its original purpose to assist in the upbuilding of the agricultural and industrial interests of the state. The record it has made is a brilliant one.

TERMINAL STREETS ARTERIES OF TRADE

Teeming With People and Vehicles Day and Night. Are Among Busiest Thoroughfares in City.

The development of the Terminal section, made of almost obscure streets, great arteries of trade and commerce, streets that before were very little traveled, became among the busiest thoroughfares in the city.

Just look at West Mitchell, North Broad, North Forsyth, West Hunter, Nelson and Madison avenue. You will find them teeming with people and vehicles all day long and often into the night.

While it is true that many who traverse these streets are going to or leaving the Terminal station, yet a great many are there for the purpose of patronizing the stores in that section, which has become such an important business district that shoppers go to Broad, Mitchell, Forsyth and Madison avenue, as they do to Whitehall and Peachtree streets.

Busy Arteries of Trade.
Mitchell street has become a real business artery, leading to Forsyth and Broad and Whitehall streets from the Terminal station. Forsyth, Broad and Whitehall all catch a part of the flow of people who throng Mitchell as they go to and from the station. Thus the four streets constitute on the south side of the city arteries of trade.

It did not take the city government long after the Terminal station was built to recognize the fact that a wonderful change would take place in that part of the city, and so Madison avenue was regraded and paved, Alabama street, as it leads into Madison avenue, was regraded and paved, Mitchell street was paved with a smooth pavement. Forsyth street was regraded, so as to remove a steep hill, and then regraded. Hunter street was graded and repaved.

These public improvements were demanded by the development of the Terminal section and they quickly imparted new impetus to the already rapid growth of the surrounding territory.

Where the Traffic Passes.
All the traffic from the Terminal station and the two railroad freight depots must pass along either West Mitchell street to Forsyth, Broad and Whitehall, or along Madison avenue to West Alabama street. The great bulk of it takes the West Mitchell street route.

Upon leaving the Terminal station, the traffic can turn down Forsyth and find an outlet that reaches all the hotels, the postoffice, the city hall and Peachtree street.

If, from Mitchell, the traffic takes South Broad street, there is the same outlet to hotels, business offices and Peachtree street.

If traffic goes the Whitehall street route, then the retail district is traversed and Peachtree reached.

The Terminal station could not have been more conveniently located when it comes to having streets that connect with other important thoroughfares.

One Thing Not There.
There is one thing that the streets of the Terminal section rarely have. They can boast of fine buildings, mercantile houses, hotels and manufactories. They can brag on fine pavements. They can lay claim to a large, moving population, but there is that one thing—

What is it?
Why, rent cards.

If there is any one thing that stands out prominently in the Terminal section, it is the absence of rent cards, for when the cards are not in evidence, then business is good and there are no vacant stores.

It was no less a person than Horace Greeley who said:

"When I visit a city I look for rent cards. When I find many I know that that town is not growing, when I find none I know that prosperity has a home."

MOON'S SHOE STORE WILL ATTRACT MANY Popular Shoe House Announces That It Will Give Away a Present Worth While.

Visitors to the Terminal district on Monday, thousands of whom will be attracted by the announcement made in today's Constitution that the merchants along Mitchell street and in other sections, have inaugurated a "Give-Away day," will do well not to overlook a drop-in at Moon's shoe store at 29 West Mitchell street.

Mr. Moon has been engaged in the shoe business in the Terminal section for several years and has built for himself a most gratifying and increasing patronage. His store, in size, appearance, artistic and convenient arrangement, as well as in the quality and price of his goods, will compare most favorably with any shoe store in this section.

When the idea of a "Give-Away day" was suggested to the merchants along this thoroughfare, Mr. Moon entered into it enthusiastically. He announces in his large advertisement in this issue that he will give away a present worth while to his visitors on Monday.

In addition, he announces "the Moon has come down on prices" and friends and customers will find many attractions at this popular shoe store during the "give-away" day, which will continue all of Monday.

GEORGIA LUMBER CO.
TO BUILD RAILROAD IN SUMTER COUNTY

Americus, Ga., June 26.—(Special)—The city council of Americus has granted a franchise to the Georgia Lumber company to operate a railroad into Americus. The right of way for the new road has been secured and according to officials of the Georgia Lumber company, actual construction work will begin within sixty days.

The new road will run from Byromville, on the A. B. & A., across the Flint river and on into Americus. A standard gauge, 40-foot wide, rail track will be constructed. A modern steel bridge will span the Flint river.

The Georgia Lumber company owns several hundred feet of timber on the sides and this new road will run through their property. The road will be 25 miles long, through one of the richest sections of Sumter county, between Americus and the river. It is proposed later to extend this road to Tifton for the proposed Americus, Tifton and Atlantic survey. The new road, which will probably be called the Americus, Flint River and Gulf, will establish shops and headquarters in Americus.

Money to finance this new road is already in sight and actual construction will begin before fall.

VALDOSTA WILL HAVE
$50,000 HOSIERY MILL

Valdosta, Ga., June 26.—(Special)—Stock subscriptions for a $50,000 hosiery mill in this city have been closed, and the announcement is made that the mill will be in operation within the next ninety days. Work on the plant will be commenced at once and will be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

Secretary J. M. Ashley, of the Valdosta Chamber of Commerce, and R. Buckley, industrial agent of the Georgia and Florida railway, were the men initiating the movement for the establishment of the enterprise in Valdosta. J. T. Blalock, president of the Southern Bank and Trust company, and his institution became actively interested together with other business men here, with the result that the capital was subscribed in a short time. B. O. Oliver and Knox Burkner, of Maryville, Tenn., who are among the leading hosiery manufacturers and customers, are heavily interested in the enterprise.

It is stated that the mill will give employment to 150 persons and with an annual payroll of $10,000 to begin with. A brick building 50x200 feet, with provision for plating and drying, indicates, will be erected and equipped with the latest knitting machines, together with a complete dyeing and finishing plant. The mill will be operated by electricity throughout.

LIVED YEAR IN SWAMP ON BERRIES AND FRUIT

Douglas, Ga., June 26.—(Special)—For more than two months the riding as far as possible all human sight, wandering in the forests and swamps of Coffee county, occasionally freed from hunger, venturing into a farmer's home to beg for bread, subsisting on berries, green corn and fruit, Mike Locker, a native of France, about 40 years old, has been assigned by City Covett side Lankford and his partner at Milledgeville. Officers Strickland and Stevens say that Locker's is the most pitiable case they have ever been called to deal with. His only relatives are two aunts in San Francisco.

TEXAS OIL WAREHOUSE AT VALDOSTA IS BURNED

Valdosta, Ga., June 26.—(Special)—The main warehouse and office of the Texas Oil company in this city was burned to the ground Saturday night with large quantities of oils and greases stored.

The fire was one of the most spectacular that ever occurred here and was extremely hard to handle, the blazing oils spattering over a wide area of the street and containers exploded. By hard work the fire department kept the flames from spreading to a large gasoline tank in the yard.

TAXABLE VALUES SHOW PROSPERITY OF SECTION

Increase in Twenty Years Has Reached Nearly Eight Hundred Per Cent.

A look at the city tax digest tells more plainly than anything else of the great and wonderful development that has taken place in a few years in the Terminal section of the city.

Only a few years ago this property was assessed at only a few thousand dollars; today it runs up into the millions. The Terminal station is itself assessed at a round million dollars.

In taking the figures from the tax digest, it is in mind that these do not represent the true value, but that fully 40 per cent must be added.

The block bounded by Forsyth, Mitchell and Nelson streets and Madison avenue is owned by the S. M. Inman estate. It was formerly a part of the old Inman home property.

When Nelson street was extended from Madison avenue to Forsyth street, the late Sam M. Inman had the entire block built up with the modern stores. The block is assessed at $175,000.

Other Large Assessments.
The south side of Nelson street, between Forsyth street and Madison avenue, is a part of the old Inman home property, which is assessed at $150,000. The rest of the block bounded by Peters, Nelson and Madison avenue and the Southern railroad, is assessed at $100,000.

The northwest corner of Forsyth and Madison streets, also on the north side of Peters street to Madison avenue, thence along the east side of Madison avenue to Nelson street. Here is how the property on that block is assessed:

Northwest corner of Forsyth and Peters streets, 19x250, owned by Mrs. H. I. Brandon, $25,000.
North side Peters, 113x60, owned by F. North side Peters street, 88x120, owned by Mrs. H. I. Brandon, $22,000.
North side Peters, 79x30, owned by G. C. Rogers, $20,000.
North side Peters, 33x100, owned by W. H. Sharpe estate, $5,500.
North side Peters, 42x95, owned by Samuel Wilkins, $11,000.
North side Peters, 30x95, owned by Samuel Wilkins, $8,000.
North side Peters, 20x95, owned by E. H. Inman, $5,000.

Madison Avenue Property.
On the northeast corner of Peters and Madison avenue, owned by the Schoen Investment company, $13,500.
On the east side of Madison, 24 feet front, owned by E. H. Inman, $5,000.
On the east side of Madison avenue, 24x33 feet, owned by M. A. Drueckner, $3,300.
On the east side of Madison avenue, 24x80, owned by Rosenfeld & Co., $3,200.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IS URGED BY BRITTAIN

Forty-Third Annual Report of Department of Education Is Made to the Governor.

The forty-third annual report of the department of education has been submitted to the governor by Professor M. L. Brittain, state superintendent of schools.

The report is one of the most exhaustive and complete that has ever been made of Georgia's schools, covering in detail all matters pertaining to every educational institution under control of the state. The report fills 520 printed pages.

As the recommendations are of the most importance to the public school system, Mr. Brittain has devoted much time and study to the needs of the schools.

Speaking of the expense of the state's public school system, Mr. Brittain says:

What the State Expends.

"Uninformed persons frequently make statements in public so misleading about the great cost of our public schools, that it is just proper for the matter to be set right officially. Instead of our spending much for public education in this state, it is a matter of exact official record that only three states spend a little and forty-four spend more. My purpose here at this point, however, is not to refer to this matter as to its statistics, but to state that we are not only not anywhere near the first in educational expenditure, but instead, are among the lowest."

Mr. Brittain says that the educational system of the state has advanced by reason of delay in the payment of teachers.

The disappointment was greater than usual, because we had been led to expect help through tax equalization.

Favors Free Text Books.

Speaking of free text books for primary grades, he says that it would be better to furnish the free texts than to increase the school appropriation. It is his opinion that the free texts should be more positive and practical if presented in the shape of text books for one or two grades than by more funds to make the term a week or two longer. It would not be wise, even if we were able to turn to these and purchase once, but it would be best to begin by supplying the basal books to the primary grades only, and then to gradually secure a compulsory attendance law. Several of our towns already furnish the books at the expense of the state and the state generally ought to have at least this opportunity. Twelve have free texts throughout the schools.

Referring to the matter of free books to have the school books printed by the state, Mr. Brittain says, as to the cost:

"My own personal view has always varied from that of the educational forces generally in the belief that the state ought, in justice to itself, to bear this matter both as to publication and right and by the method of leasing plant and type. With the color like a civic, history, or reader, it could be tried with more chance for success. It is, however, a question, certain well-known influences have pointed to the state school superintendent as the chief enemy of this measure."

Great stress is laid upon the work being done by M. L. Brittain, who is making a survey of the school system. The superintendent believes that a great and lasting good is being accomplished. Mr. Brittain, he states, is still at work and will go over the entire state.

"The good ladies," says the superintendent, "have given material aid to the domestic science training, among whom was Mrs. Walton H. Wiggs."

Mr. Brittain favors an illiteracy commission to look after the adults who have grown up without being able to read or write.

Compulsory Education.

For the enforcement of a compulsory education law, Mr. Brittain offers the following suggestion:

"The first suggestion is unusual, but it is so simple that it would seem to reach the trouble effectively. It is in effect that you consider the parents of a simple bill, a dozen lines in length, declaring that every father who neglects to provide his children with the necessary food, clothing, medical attention, and education to the extent, at least, of reading, writing, and the calculation of simple figures, may be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction may be fined not less than $10 or in default of this, be deemed to work the public roads not less than ten days."

The report embraces reports of county superintendents, and the superintendents of all of the state's educational institutions. The information given from all departments is full and complete.

PERMANENT HIGHWAYS ARE URGED BY SIBLEY

Indorses Andrews Bill for Commission—Says Better Roads Mean Less Maintenance.

"As Georgia always keeps pace in the march of progress in all things affecting her welfare, I am confident the bill to create a state highway commission will be promptly enacted by the legislature," said John W. Sibley, secretary-treasurer of the Southern Paving Brick Manufacturers' association, who has been attending the quarterly meeting of the association at the Piedmont hotel.

Mr. Sibley is an ex-Georgiaian, being a member of the Sibley family of Augusta, but has for many years resided in Birmingham, being president of its chamber of commerce in 1912.

"Walter P. Andrews is to be highly commended for his far-seeing and patriotic wisdom in preparing and introducing this bill," said Mr. Sibley, "as the only way to intelligently and economically co-ordinate the work of road building by the various counties, is through a state highway commission."

Good Roads Save Expense.

"The annual cost of maintenance of temporary roads, especially in large counties like Fulton, would easily pay the interest on bonds to construct permanent and dependable highways like the tiled brick roads built by Fulton county last year, and the extension of South Pryor street, where the concrete is being successfully used in the construction work."

"Upon the recommendation of Governor Clayton in a special message in 1911 the legislature of New York approved the plan of discontinuing the millions of dollars of the state highway, and all the state highways are being built on permanent basis. This has long been the practice in Ohio and Pennsylvania and other progressive states, all of which have state highway commissions, and the most efficient and competent engineers in charge of same, under the control of the governor and other members."

Aid to Farmers.

Mr. Sibley said he recently visited Cleveland, Ohio, and inspected the splendid highways of Cuyahoga county built of vitrified brick, some of which have been laid for fifteen years, and have not cost the county anything for repairs and are good for many years more. This single county has over 500 miles of such highways and the adjoining counties, under the state highway commission, have co-operated in building an interurban highway between Cleveland and Akron, seventy miles over which a motor truck service is operated on regular schedule, not only to the great benefit of the consumer, but the wholesale merchant and the truck farms.

"There is no sound reason why Georgia should not in a few years accomplish similar results, and it is eminently fitting that the great county of Fulton should take the initiative in this most important movement," observed Mr. Sibley.

HOSPITAL FOR CRIPPLES IN RECEIPT OF $100,000

Augusta, Ga., June 26.—(Special.)—Mrs. Minnie Hattie Aiken, who will be the founder of the Georgia State Hospital for Cripples, is quite enthusiastic over the fact that her efforts have so far secured subscriptions of $100,000 toward the erection of the building. It is planned to place the institution in Augusta, where the noteworthy staff of the medical college and the climate will combine to make for comfort for the unfortunate who it is intended to reach. After a visit in the east, Miss Aiken intends to tour the state this summer and secure funds for the financing of the project.

calls this car, which is used by the call officers and policemen stationed at headquarters, his "jitney bus."

Captain Terry says: "Chief Beavers has his private car, and Mr. Morris has his, so I guess I will just adopt that young fellow for my own jitney bus."

It is not an infrequent sight on the streets, now to see Captain Terry, his once famous horse discarded, rounding up his patrolmen in his so-called "jitney bus."

Uncle Jack Tippin, one of the best patrolmen on the force, is confined at the Grady hospital, where he is suffering from a stroke of paralysis. Uncle Jack was found by a street car conductor on Fair street, at the Oakland cemetery box, last Monday night, stricken with paralysis. His condition, much to the regret of his many friends, is little improved.

Mr. and Mrs. Swint, of Albermarle avenue, informally entertained at cards a few of their friends last Thursday evening, and among the guests were Chief Beavers and Assistant Chief E. L. Jett, the father of Mrs. Swint.

Call Officer E. R. Haslett, who recently shot himself through his foot by a bullet which had passed through the body of a mad dog and glanced from a can, is still walking on crutches. He is taking the Pasteur treatment for his third time, having been bitten by mad dogs on two former occasions when bravely attempting to check the onrush of the beasts on a crowd of small children.

Officer Bill McKinney, the smallest policeman of the force, has returned to work, after being confined to his home on crutches for two weeks as the result of a fall from his motorcycle while answering a burglary call. The

LIVE FIGHT EXPECTED ON THE LOCKER CLUBS

Council May Bar All Those Established After Prohibition Began.

Indications Saturday pointed to a lively fight in general council Monday when, in adjourned session applications will be considered for locker club and pool room licenses. It was reported that the majority of the pool room applications will be turned down, since they are operated jointly with near beer saloons. Of the twenty applications for locker club licenses, it is said that only five will be granted without contest. The five in question are those that were in operation before the prohibition law was passed in 1907. The five are: The Elks' Capital City club, Atlanta Athletic club, Piedmont Driving club and Temperance club. Several of the council members have stated publicly that they may vote to license all of the clubs with the exception of the Owl club, against which complaint has been made. The mayor has deferred action on the 152 licenses granted last Monday for near beer saloons, until council takes action tomorrow on the locker clubs and pool rooms. He has also furnished a list of all applications and is making an investigation of many of them.

GOVERNOR HARRIS QUILTS LAW FIRM; SONS SUCCEED HIM

Judge Nat Harris announced yesterday being inaugurated as governor of Georgia, that he had severed his connection with his Macon law firm, upon the position that his membership in a law firm is incompatible with his tenure of the office of chief executive of the state. The firm, which was formerly known as Harris & Harris, is now Harris, Harris & Witman. The firm was formerly composed of Judge Harris, his two sons, Walter A. Harris and John B. Harris, and M. J. Witman. Mr. Witman's name did not appear in the style of the old firm. The only difference in the personnel of the firm now is that caused by the retirement of Judge Harris. "I retired from the firm," said Judge Harris, "because I did not feel that I should be connected with any law firm while I was governor of the state."

BEN BANKS PARDONED BY GOVERNOR SLATON

Man Who Entered Wickerham Home Freed Through Mrs. Springer's Efforts.

After serving eighteen months of a ten-year sentence at the Conyers, Ga., convict camp, Ben Banks, aged 25, who was convicted of burglarizing the home of C. A. Wickerham, in College Park, a year and a half ago, was pardoned by Governor Slaton Monday morning. The pardon was secured by Mrs. I. Springer, who drafted a petition and presented it signed to the pardoning board, and later to the governor.

According to Mrs. Springer, Banks had been under the influence of liquor prior to the time of his arrest on the burglary charge. She stated that liquor accounted for his act and that he was a good man, taking care of a wife and four children, when not under its influence.

The pardon was so arranged by Mrs. Springer, that it came as a birthday present to Banks. He was liberated on his thirty-eighth birthday.

Maintenance Budget Adopted By Trustees of University

The University of Georgia, including all of its allied branches, will follow this year the closest economy in its demands upon the funds of the state, as is indicated by the action of the board of trustees which met at the University club in Atlanta last week and made up its budget for presentation to the general assembly.

The trustees, recognizing the need of holding the state's expenses down as low as possible during the existing conditions, caused by the war, will ask this year not a cent of special appropriations, with the exception of $4,500 for an infirmary at the State Normal school. Moreover, the general appropriation asked will be increased but $47,500 over the last appropriation. This is the smallest increase that has been asked in many years.

The board announced its approval of the appropriation of $25,174 for the first year, and $46,150 for the second year, necessary to supplement the federal appropriation under the Smith-Lever bill. By making such an appropriation Georgia would receive from the federal government duplicate amounts for the agricultural college, in addition to a flat federal appropriation of $10,000, whereas, if these funds are not appropriated by the Georgia general assembly, Georgia will receive from the federal government only the flat appropriation of $10,000 each year.

The following is the budget for maintenance for the next two years as adopted by the board of trustees:

Dixie Highway Western Route Reported in Great Condition

The western route of the Dixie highway south of Macon, Ga., is in a condition "vastly above expectation," according to a report just made to Clark Howell, of Atlanta, and W. T. Anderson, of Macon, Dixie highway commissioners for Georgia, by E. J. Clarke, secretary of the Brooks County Industrial and Automobile Association, secretary of the Thomasville Commercial association, who have just traversed the route from Macon to Thomasville by automobile.

Their report states that the condition of the road is a "magnificent justification of the commission's selection of this as the western route of the road," says the report, is in almost perfect condition, with the exception of a total of about five miles scattered at various points of the route between Macon and Albany.

The party left Macon at 11 o'clock in the morning and arrived in Thomasville the same night. The time made was from thirty to sixty miles per hour.

South of Albany to Thomasville, says the report, heavy work is being done on certain stretches of the road, while other parts of the roads "are the finest we have ever traveled over."

Secretaries Clarke and Gardner are taking up the matter of the improvement of the few miles of inferior road with the commissioners of the counties in which these stretches are found.

Macon Drum and Bugle Corps Serenades The Constitution

The Macon drum and bugle corps, which put up such a protective appearance upon the downtown streets and in the inauguration ceremonies Saturday, marched to the front of The Constitution building early last night and gave a serenade.

A large crowd of passersby was attracted. The Macon organization is one of the best trained in the state. Beginning with a blast of bugle calls and drum tattoos, the players wound up with a rendition of Tippecanoe.

HAL REID IN ATLANTA PROBING FRANK CASE

His Moving Pictures Were Wanted by Defense in the Thaw Case.

The Ansley hotel lobby, bustling with visitors to the inauguration ceremonies, was the scene of the Atlanta angle to the Harry Thaw trial Saturday afternoon.

Hal Reid, the noted playwright, author and investigator, was informed that the Thaw prosecution had announced it intended using a set of motion pictures photographed by Reid to establish the fact that Thaw was insane.

The playwright immediately got busy on the wire to New York. He was informed by John B. Stanfield, Thaw's chief counsel, that the prosecution planned to show by the pictures taken by Reid in the prisoner's cell that Thaw was subject to a nervous ailment that constantly caused his face and throat to twitch.

In a lengthy telegram, Reid explained to the attorney for the defense that the pictures had been taken at a slow speed in order that full exposure could be gained to eliminate the defective light of the prisoner's cell, in which they were photographed, and that when the film was run off on the projection machine, which was naturally run at a greater speed, the figures were caused to jump in unnatural fashion.

Hal Reid is author of 100 plays. He is in the city of the prisoner's cell in the Thaw case, upon which he plans to write an analysis. He visited Milledgeville Saturday morning where he had a talk with the prisoner and his wardens. He has already held two conferences with the attorney, Stanfield, to whom he introduced by letters from the secretary of state and the secretary of war.

RAY TAYLOR ENTERS THE PUBLICITY GAME

Well-Known Newspaper Ad Writer Opens Office in the Empire Building.

After spending eighteen years in the advertising game for some of the leading clothing and furnishing houses in the state, and making in addition a special study of artistic window displays and conducting special sales, Ray Taylor, one of the most popular young men of the city, has entered business for himself, with offices in the Empire building.

In Mr. Taylor's experience in his special lines he has been connected with some of the largest concerns in the state, and for the past few years has held responsible positions with some of the strongest establishments in this city. He has had large experience in writing newspaper advertisements, circulars, booklets, packages and letter enclosures, his work in this line being marked by the distinct characteristics of a man of original and artistic ideas.

Mr. Taylor is also recognized as an expert in window dressing, and many of the beautiful displays that have in the past attracted the passers-by in this city have been of his creation. He announces also to his friends that he expects to make a specialty of putting on special and artistic window displays, to handle this feature for any department or any line.

One of the features of Mr. Taylor's work will be the attention given to handling the advertising accounts of out-of-town clients.

Personally Mr. Taylor is a genial and affable gentleman, who makes and his friends easily and they are predicting for him much success in his new line of publicity and sales promotion work.

CHICKENS IN QUITMAN HATCHED OUT BY SUN

Quitman, Ga., June 25.—(Special).—Eleven little chickens were hatched in Quitman last Thursday with the sun playing the role of mother.

A hen belonging to Lilla Johnson, a colored woman who lives on West Barton street, deserted her nest after setting on the eggs exactly two weeks. Lilla could not make the hen return to the nest, and deciding the eggs were a loss, drew the box containing the eggs out of the hen's coop and neglected to throw the nest and eggs away, and they were left exposed to the heat of the sun. The first of them began to hatch out. Within two days every egg had hatched, and the entire eleven chickens were as lively as if they had been reared beneath the maternal wing.

ALEXANDER KENEALY PASSES IN LONDON

London, June 24.—Alexander Kenealy, editor of The London Daily Mirror, died today.

Mr. Kenealy, a native of Sussex, devoted all his life to journalism. He joined the staff of The New York Herald in 1882, and represented that paper on many of its first Arctic expeditions. He became a member of The New York World staff in 1896, and was its correspondent with the American fleet in the Spanish war.

Mr. Kenealy began newspaper work in London as news editor of The Daily Express in 1901. Three years later he went with The Daily Mirror. Under the name of "The Montague" he wrote "The Preposterous Yankee." He also was the author of "The Letters of the Paphos to Mouton."

AMERICAN ZIONISTS GATHER IN BOSTON

Boston, June 26.—Several thousand representatives of Zionist organizations of the country arrived here today for the opening session tomorrow of a conference regarded as the most important ever held by American Zionists, according to leaders of the movement.

Zionism in Europe has been seriously affected by the war, and as Jews there are unable to bear their portion of the burden of Zionist work, added responsibility for the success of the movement devolves upon American Zionists. It is contended that at the end of the war there will be keen competition for Palestine, and that the logical disposition of it should be to assign it to the Jews.

Louis D. Brandeis, president of the allied conventions, who was one of the speakers at a reception tendered the delegates outlined the purpose of the Zionist movement, pointing out that it was not intended to compel Jews to move back to Palestine, but was designed to give them more freedom. This freedom, he said, was expected to give Jews rights now enjoyed by other peoples, and the privilege of living at their option in the land of their fathers or in some other country.

The organization represented in the convention include the Zionist Provisional Committee conferences, the Federation of American Zionists, the International Zionist conference, Mirachi, Young Jews and Hachodes. The formal opening exercises will be held tomorrow morning. The delegates will be greeted by Dr. Harry Friedenwald, honorary president of the American Zionists.

MAIL ORDERS FILLED FOR ADVERTISED MERCHANDISE

High Scholastic Honors Won by Korean at Emory

Oxford, Ga., June 26—(Special.)—One of the most remarkable young men in the recent class of forty-six who graduated from Emory is Youtaik Kim of Korea. Mr. Kim was one of the eight members of the class to make a speaker's place at commencement, and was awarded the senior orator's medal. His theme was "America the Hope of the World." Ten years ago, in Honolulu, Youtaik, a lad of 15, was often hungry because he did not know how to ask for something to eat, or when meals were announced. On commencement day, at Emory, practically every word of his splendidly delivered oration was understood by a large and appreciative audience.

Mr. Kim was born in Pyeong Yang, Korea, some twenty-five years ago. When he was 15 years old he came with his father, Rev. Y. S. Kim, to the Hawaiian Islands. There, for two years, he was a student in Mills Institute, beginning in the primary department. He was graduated from the Hawaiian Islands in 1907, and then more class in Emory that fall in addition to completing the required course in the Ph. B. degree and making a minor in chemistry. His graduation was anniversary orator for the Few Literary society, and was on the honor roll in 1912, 1913. He will enter the medical school of Emory university in Atlanta Medical College this fall.

Mr. Kim was a brother and evangelist in Korea, who was educated in the California Bible Institute, Los Angeles. A sister, Miss Yungsoon Kim (English name Esther), now 20 years old, is a student of music in the California Bible Institute.

Another interesting foreigner in Mr. Kim's class is James Inouye, of Kioto, Japan. Mr. Inouye also made speaker's place at commencement and was awarded the chemistry medal.

Doa Waa Lim, of Korea, is now a pupil in Emory, having finished sophomore year. He was one of the six sophomores to make a declaimer's place at the recent commencement.

BAHNSEN WAGING WAR IN GEORGIA ON CATTLE TICK

The amount of good which is being accomplished by Dr. Peter F. Bahnsen, state veterinarian, in his fight to rid Georgia of the cattle tick can be seen by reading his annual report, which has just been made to Commissioner of Agriculture J. D. Foy. In this report he pays a high tribute to cotton seed meal as a feedstuff. His tribute to this nutritious and inexpensive feed follows:

"Every pound of cotton seed meal fed on the farm helps to make the owner or the tenant rich, every pound of this great feeding concentrate sold outside of the state means a direct loss to the state and must ultimately be replaced by less valuable or more expensive nitrates in our commercial fertilizer. Cotton seed meal and corn or corn and sorghum ensilage is one of the least expensive and at the same time one of the best combinations for finishing cattle for market available."

Dr. Bahnsen has long had the co-operation of the Cotton Seed Crushers' Association of Georgia in his effort to rid the state of the cattle tick, and many of the mills in Georgia have built at their own expense concrete dipping vats along the specifications furnished by Dr. Bahnsen.

With the heavy demand abroad as well as at home for meat and the gradual eradication of the cattle tick it is believed that the cattle raising industry will continue to grow in fact, not only in Georgia, but throughout the south.

Stagnant Blood Given A Quick Impulse

Wonderful Activity Imparted by a Famous Remedy.

The appearance of pimples, boils, skin eruptions and all evidence of impure blood, calls for S. S. S., the famous blood purifier. Catarrhs, purges, bowel movers and laxatives won't do.

No amount of bile will destroy certain germs which cause skin eruptions. They are away down deep in the tissues, perhaps in the very marrow of the bones. And such a condition calls for the searching influence of S. S. S. It is indeed a remarkable remedy, since it is taken up by the blood stream and never loses its medicinal influence. On and on it goes, through and through the entire system and always with the same definite action to dislodge germs, destroy their activity and stimulate the liver, lungs, kidneys, bowels and skin to throw them out completely.

It stimulates stagnant blood, provides a rational exhilaration to the nerve centers and thereby the natural functions of the body are aroused to cast out intruders, no matter how strongly entrenched they may be. It refutes the ancient theory that to destroy within us the germs that eat into our vitals calls for drugs that destroy our very existence. Get S. S. S. today at any drugist and for special advice on severe blood disorders write at once to the Medical Adviser, The Swift Specific Co., 103 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Do not accept a substitute. BROOKLYN HANDICAP IS WON BY TARTAR

But Only After Terrific Battle With Roamer and Borrow in the Stretch.

New York, June 26.—By winning the twenty-sixth renewal of the historic Brooklyn handicap at Aqueduct today, and establishing a new track record of 1:59 3-5 for 9 furlongs, R. T. Wilson's 5-year-old bay gelding, Tartar, by Oden-Wadden Slaters, carrying 103 pounds and ridden by Jockey Johnny McTaggart, accomplished all and a bit more than his owner and trainer expected from him.

Andrew Miller's Roamer finished second and Harry Payne Whitney's Borrow, the topweight, running in the slick of L. S. Thompson, was third. The two were the first and second public choices, while the winner was the outsider in the small field.

Rock View, after cutting up at the start, was off running, and opened up a big gap in the first sixteenth. Then Roamer raced by him, and setting a terrific pace, went into a three-length lead, with Tartar second. After they were well into the long stretch Roamer showed signs of weakening, then Tartar closed strongly, and Jockey Norton, on Borrow, was coming along on the outside.

All through the last eighth it was a terrific battle between this trio, and right at the end the lightweight Tartar, who in 1906 and duplicated last year by Flying Fairy.

George Jordan Led Flag Hitters for First Season

By Dick Jewison.

George Jordan, Brunswick's brilliant young catcher was the leading batsman of the F. L. A. G. league at the conclusion of the first half season which ended Tuesday, June 22, with an average of .318. His teammate, Reilly, with .317, and another teammate, Willard, with .310, were next in line.

Dunning, of Gainesville, made the most hits, with 61. Reynolds, of Brunswick, was next, with 50 and Reilly and Willard, of Brunswick, tied for third, with 49 each.

Roddy, of Dothan, led the run getters with 47 tallies. Reynolds of Brunswick, was next with 39 and Reilly of Brunswick third, with 35.

Reilly of Brunswick, led the base stealers, with 23 pilfers. Wilkes of Gainesville, and Stewart, of Waycross, were next with 20 each.

Heek, of Dothan, led the sacrificers, with 27. Nance of Brunswick, with 19, and Jordan, of Brunswick, with 17 were next in line.

The reason that Brunswick led the pennant race is at once apparent with the number of men that they have at the top in all departments of play. Here are the records of the players through Tuesday's games:

John N. Willys Believes In Newspaper Advertising

The Overland is frequently referred to as the most advertised of all motor cars. And this extensive publicity is declared by John N. Willys, president of the Willys-Overland company, to be the principal reason why the Overland can be sold at a price which would mean a loss on every car to the majority of manufacturers.

Mr. Willys points out how the widespread advertising done by his company has made it possible to market the new Overland Model 83 for so low a price as $750.

"I recently overheard a remark during a conversation in the smoker of a Pullman indicating that the talker believed Overland advertising cost about $200 per car. This, of course, is preposterous. Last year our advertising cost per car was a little less than 2 1/2 per cent, this year it will be a trifle less next year materially less—due to greatly increased production.

"The quantity of our production spreads all overhead, so that the item per car is so small that the buyer pays for but little more than the actual material and labor, plus a reasonable profit which, also because of quantity, is small per car.

"Given two cars of equal mechanical and structural worth—the one built in large quantities can always sell for a lower price than the one built in limited numbers. The larger the production the greater the supply of materials purchased. And the larger the price for raw materials the lower the price to the manufacturer.

"Consequently, we believe the Overland message to the public through these papers, through the medium of these papers, is the most successful in this direction we have met with success. Our newspaper advertising, together with advertising in other media, is in a way, a measure of our success."

I have all the faith in the world in newspapers, he says. "The daily newspaper is the university of the masses. People who read no other publication read newspapers. They get their news of the world and form their opinions of people and things from what they read in the dailies.

"And the influence of the newspaper is by no means local. It extends for a radius of many miles around the center of publication. The great body of newspaper readers is composed of millions of city residents and hundreds of thousands of people who live in neighboring cities and towns and in the country. This year the Studebaker announcement is more significant than ever before. It demonstrates more conclusively than ever Studebaker's leadership in the industry. For once again, Studebaker is announcing new cars at prices that completely recast all standards of value in the automobile industry. And never before has a dollar bought so much as it buys in these new Studebakers. They are the best cars in every detail that Studebaker ever built.

But while the prices are remarkably low, Studebaker has made no effort to manufacture a small, low-price car, to compete purely on a price basis.

THE PRICES ARE LOW SOLELY:

- 1—Because of largely increased volume of production;
- 2—Unrivaled manufacturing resources;
- 3—The Studebaker policy of manufacturing our cars complete in our own factories and thus eliminating part-makers' profits;
- 4—The greatly increased efficiency resulting from 4 years study and concentration on the manufacture of two chassis;
- 5—The high percentage of interchangeability of parts in the two chassis.

A whole Book of Specifications couldn't begin to convey the impression that your first glimpse of the cars will give—you must see the cars to appreciate them.

LIBERAL OFFER MADE BY GOODYEAR COMPANY

Will Refund Cost if S-V Tires Are Not Superior to Competing Makes.

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber company announces a continuation of the offer to refund the entire purchase price if Goodyear S-V tires fail to prove superior to competing makes on a test of cost per mile.

The announcement made covering April, May and June was to the effect that where opposite wheels are equipped at the same time one with a Goodyear S-V and one with any other standard truck tire of like rated size bought in the open market if the Goodyear S-V tire cost less than the other, the full purchase price will be refunded.

"There are two main reasons for our continuance of the offer," says C. W. Martin Jr., manager motor truck tire department, "First, many truck owners desiring to take advantage of our offer have been unable to do so as they did not need a replacement of tires during the months specified. And second, the magnificent response to the challenge has rendered it such a complete success that we simply can't let go."

Many truck tire users have wondered why we dare make such a positive proposition. Our offer is based on the fact that our S-Vs can do what we are not arguing that they excel. A trial truck tire was guaranteed at above market value.

The tires are pressed on in a few minutes at a minimum pressure of 20 tons. This prevents any possibility of air and eliminates all auxiliary fastenings.

This new Goodyear S-V appears to me the limit of perfection in truck tire. It certainly exceeds anything heretofore offered. On this fact we are staking the whole price of the tire.

SAXON MOTOR COMPANY PLANS NOVEL CONTEST

A novel contest among automobile dealers is about to be staged by the Saxon Motor company. The contest will take place on July 15. It will be known as Saxon Six day. On that day dealers from all over the country will start from the factory doors in New Sixes to their home towns.

A silver loving cup will be given to the dealer making the best record on the entire trip. The loving cup will be presented by the Saxon Motor company and will be engraved with the dealer's name, date of the contest and the record made on the trip.

According to the rules of the contest only those dealers will be eligible for the prize who drive at least 100 miles in making the trip. Each dealer taking part will order one or more Sixes which he and members of his organization will drive home on July 15.

Following a banquet on the evening of July 14, the contest will be made at noon July 15, from Cadillac Square in the center of Detroit. Mayor Marx will be the official starter, and representatives of the Detroit newspapers officiating as checkers. The local newspapers in the dealers' home towns will check the arrival of the contestants and send to Detroit a statement of gasoline and mileage consumed. No entry will be made to make any speed records, the contest being entirely for economy and efficiency.

While the Sixes are coming to the factory it is expected that a great many dealers will take part in the contest. In fact, the practice of coming to Detroit to drive cars away is already the custom of a great many dealers who make the trip to Detroit for the purpose of trying to get additional cars over and above their regular allotment.

Trained shipments and an operating schedule of 100 cars a day are making the trip to the Saxon factory the largest month in the history of the company. The Saxon is making one of the largest orders of motor cars in the industry.

MOTORCYCLE RIDERS SEEK TAX REDUCTION

Do Not Believe They Should Have to Pay as Much as Drivers of Machines.

One of the most important questions of interest to the 4,000 motorcycle riders in the state of Georgia, which the legislature now in session will be asked to act upon is the 45 tag tax that is imposed upon the rider of a motorcycle for the privilege of riding his machine over the road of the state for a year. He has to pay the tag tax that is asked of the driver of an automobile, whether his machine costs $500 or $5,000.

It is generally conceded by very nearly every member of the legislature and senate that have been approached on this question that the tax of 45 on motorcycles is unjust and unfair. This question was brought before the legislature last year but was defeated by a small majority, although the rural mail carriers who are greatly interested in this bill had passed a resolution at their convention held in the Kimball house on July 4 last, asking the legislature to amend this act in such a way as to reduce the price of the tag tax on motorcycles to 32 as there are probably over 500 rural carriers in the state who carry the mails on motorcycles.

Gus Castle, who is director for the American Motorcyclist Association of American Motorcyclists, has the matter in hand and has been promised the support of quite a number of the members of the house to vote for the amendment when brought up.

"The removal of the members who are present at this session have automobile bills or amendments to bring before the house during this session. Among them is Senator Callahan in talking over the difference between the tax as charged the automobile and motorcycle. Senator Callahan saw that it was in fair and has promised to take care of this in his amendment.

Mr. Blackburn representative of Fulton county, has been approached and is heartily in favor of the amendment asking for a reduction of the tax bringing it down to at least $2 a year. The R. F. D. carriers all over the state have taken the matter up with their various representatives. It is an almost assured fact that this untaxation of the motorcycle will be remedied during this session and in all probability the reduction will be brought to the figure that will not be over $2 a year which of course will meet the approval of every rider of a motorcycle in the state."

GULL SCRIBE WISHES KELLY BETTER LUCK

Says Barney Sheridan in The Mobile Register.

While the Gulls have been floundering around losing game after game through tough breaks and the like, Herb Kelly Mobile boy now pitching for Atlanta, seems to be troubled with the same ailment. Herb recently held New Orleans hitters for eight innings, but a couple of hits in the ninth broke him. Yesterday he held Birmingham hitters for nine innings, then lost in the tenth when he walked a man, made an error and allowed one hit. Such are the rough breaks of the game and though beaten the youngster has set himself into good standing all over the Southern League. He has a good bunch of Mobile fans because of the pitch he breaks. Some of them are pulling for him to break the streak and give up victory each good pitching day.

STUDEBAKER MODELS STARTLE AUTO WORLD

Examinations Show That Cars Will Be High Grade in Every Particular.

By announcing for 1916 a seven-passenger, 40-horsepower four at $885 and a seven-passenger, 50-horsepower four at $1,050, Studebaker has once more startled the motoring public.

And once more Studebaker has proved the soundness of his policy of manufacturing methods and a wealth of manufacturing experience can reduce prices and yet maintain high standards of quality.

That these are high-grade cars in every essential will be evident from the most recent examination. The specifications as given by the engineering department at the Detroit factory indicate that the quality is even higher than with last year's cars. They show that finer steel has been used than the upper grades and that the highest grade of leather the market affords for the finishing operations have been increased to twenty-five in number. The cost of the material of manufacture are still further indicative of quality.

Not only all these improvements and changes the prices have been radically reduced in comparison with those of last year. The new cars also and power has ever been offered at anywhere near the price of $885. No seven-passenger, 50-horsepower, four ever came within hundreds of dollars of the new price of $1,050.

The new cars illustrate more conclusively than ever the Studebaker policy of dignity in design. The Studebaker has never gone in for unneeded lines, and the public does not care for cars that follow the fads of style that each new season sees.

Accordingly in this year's cars Studebaker has adhered to its customary line, simply improving them in some slight details that add to effect. The line of the hood melts into the cowl, and the cowl itself has been made deeper design than ever and clings more closely to the curves of the motor and the lines of the front end flow in unbroken curves from the radiator back to the tail-lamp. Grace is the dominant note of the whole design and while the new cars are longer than ever and more massive in look, they are more dignified in content cars that have ever been produced.

EVELYN NESBIT THAW SOUGHT AS A WITNESS

Fruitless Search Is Made for Harry Thaw's Wife in New York City.

New York, June 26.—In the lull today in the court proceedings to determine the sanity of Harry K. Thaw it became known that the state is trying to find Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, central figure in the shooting of Stanford White, to place her on the witness stand. AMERICAN COTTON SHIP ALLOWED TO PROCEED

London, June 26.—The American cotton steamer Leelanaw under detention at Kirkwall since early June has been allowed to proceed to Archangel to discharge her cargo consigned to Russia.

The Leelanaw was detained because her cargo was consigned to the port of Gothenberg, Sweden, which country forbids the export of cotton.

It was explained shortly after the Leelanaw's detention that because of the prohibition by the Swedish government on cotton exports the British government desired some assurances that the cotton would reach Russia.

ANTI-LOCKER CLUB LAW DECLARED TO BE VOID

Judge Edrington Holds Tennessee Measure Unconstitutional—Appeal to Be Taken.

Memphis, Tenn., June 26.—Tennessee's new locker club law prohibiting storage of liquors for individual use in social and fraternal clubs, was held unconstitutional in a decision handed down here today by Judge Jesse E. Edrington in the criminal court. The law became effective June 1, last. The ruling was made in a test case brought by a local fraternal organization.

The contentions were that the act was unjust and discriminatory, that the caption of the bill did not meet the requirements of the state constitution and that it was in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution. The state supreme court is expected to pass upon the case at its September term.

JAPAN HAD PLANNED TO CAPTURE PEKIN

If Her Demands Had Been Refused by the Chinese Government.

Tokyo.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press)—It is clear that the Japanese demands for the recent ultimatum by Japan, the Japanese program would have been to capture Peking which would have been a matter before breakfast, and to have effected a military occupation of other centers of political power and wealth according to semi-official newspapers.

The Japanese Times a journal printed in English but controlled by representative and influential Japanese which is usually believed to have good authority for its utterances undertook to outline the course Japan would take even before the diplomatic crisis with China had been passed.

In most quarters its publications of these details, the ultimatum forbidden before the outbreak of war, was regarded as officially inspired very likely with the object of convincing China that Japan was determined and would brook no delay.

The article made it clear that the independent action which Japan in her ultimatum said she would take if China was obdurate would not necessarily be war. It would be better advised perhaps a military and naval occupation of China pending acceptance of the Japanese demands. Nevertheless, it would be effectively an execution of the demands by force of arms.

The general staff had estimated the military force of China at 47 divisions containing 200,000 troops of regular training and 1,000,000 men of the old school. However as these troops were scattered all over the Chinese empire their mobilization and concentration would be difficult.

Japan's military base would be established at Tientsin. A fundamental necessity being the control of the principal means of communication the railway between Peking and Tientsin would have to be captured. Their occupation would firmly establish a Japanese foothold in China. The troops stationed at Tientsin would be able to occupy Tientsin in a minute. The route from Tientsin to Peking Pukow railway, that is the line between Tientsin and Tsinan could easily be occupied by the Japanese. The base of operation Japanese soldiers would soon be seen marching on Peking in China there was stationed one company of infantry while in Tientsin were two companies with machine guns. The soldiers in Peking would act as escort for Minister Hsichin in Tientsin where he would embark in a warship and proceed to Japan.

The account declared that in the south moves would have to be made by the army and navy and then the better part of China would be under Japanese sway. Special care would be taken to protect Japanese and other foreign residents.

The journal continued: "When the centers of China are guarded by a garrison the soldiers will be disbanded. Then all places will be put under the control of our army and order will be maintained by our military administration. If the Chinese army offers no resistance, China will be carried out in peace but when they show any resistance soldiers will be obliged to fire upon them. And it is to be feared that engagements will take place between the Chinese and Japanese troops here and there as the land of China is so extensive that peace cannot be established at a moment's notice."

In this program continued, the two divisions under Lieutenant-General Hunge and Ando would be concentrated in Mukden and marshalled against the seventeenth, eighteenth and twentieth divisions of the Chinese army. The two Chinese generals, Tsen Tsun-lin and Fong Lung-kuo, who command these divisions, would soon surrender when informed of the real situation. The northern part of the Peking-Mukden railway would be captured by Japanese troops. Great numbers would then be landed at some points in the province of Chihli. Peking would be seized immediately. Indeed, the fall of Peking would be a matter before breakfast.

The outline concluded: "In the event of our navy will soon be swept from the coast, and our fleet will be dispersed. The British troops garrisoned in Hongkong and Canton will operate with our soldiers in this part of China. This our troops will carry all before them wherever they go in the land."

AMERICANS MUST CARRY PHOTOGRAPH PASSPORTS

New York, June 26.—Americans leaving here today on board steamships for Europe were warned by agents of the various lines to provide themselves with passports with photographs of all members of their families more than 14 years old. This was in part due to receipt of information that during the last month seventeen Americans have been detained upon arrival in Liverpool for failure to carry such documents. Any alien leaving New York for Europe is permitted to travel on a steamship of his own nationality without a passport, but most of the lines reject all other passengers not so identified. This rule it was learned, has been put into effect by the Holland-America, French, White Star, Scania-Scandinavia, American and Italian lines. Considerable delay in the landing of passengers at Liverpool is said to have ensued by persons who, having been naturalized in the United States, declare when they arrive in England that they are British subjects.

Rev. Theodore Flood Dead.

Meadville, Pa., June 26.—Rev. Theodore L. Flood, well-known in Methodist Episcopal church circles, died at his home here tonight. Rev. Mr. Flood was associated with Bishop John H. Vincent in founding the Chautauque institution, and was founder and for twenty-five years editor of the Chautauque Magazine. He was 74 years old.

UNITED STATES LOSING ITS ORDNANCE EXPERTS

Army Officers Resign to Work for Private Manufacturers at High Salaries.

Washington, June 26.—Offers of big salaries to expert ordnance officers of the army by private manufacturers of war munitions have created such a serious problem in the war department that Secretary Garrison called on Attorney General Gregory for an opinion as to whether an army officer has an "inalienable right" to resign his commission in time of peace.

Four such resignations have been accepted but two others recently tendered are being held up pending the attorney general's decision and the formulation of a general policy by the department. Ordinarily this question frequently raised in the navy as a result of offers from shipbuilding companies to young constructors gives the army little trouble. Few officers have been anxious to abandon their mili-

Barons Sign Lindsay.

New Orleans, June 26.—The Birmingham Southern association club today signed Lindsay, a third baseman formerly with New Orleans. Lindsay will succeed Hemingway, who is ill.

The trade was predicted in The Constitution several weeks ago.

Fayetteville Wins.

Fayetteville, Ga., June 26.—(Special) Fayetteville won over Union City here today 6 to 0. With the score tied in the last half of the ninth inning Burke hit the ball over left field fence scoring Jackson who was on first with two out.

High Government Officials and Army Officers Generally are Awaiting with more than ordinary interest the determination of the issue by the attorney general. On his decision will depend whether ordnance experts will be permitted to enter private employment. The problem thus presented to the war department is admittedly a serious one. Already six resignations have been submitted, two being held up pending the decision of the attorney general. The other four were accepted before the gravity of the situation was realized.

An effort will be made to prevent resignations if a way can be found to do so, although legal officers are said to be doubtful on this point. It is considered it unpatriotic for officers to quit the service for more money.

High government officials are reluctant to permit wholesale resignations under such circumstances, and even are inclined to consider it unpatriotic for officers to quit the service for more money. Apparently however the legal authorities seriously doubt that any law can be found to keep an officer in the army against his will, particularly if he has served a reasonable number of years of service, but the propriety of this view has been questioned, as these men have left the active list either for acceptable cause or after growing old. The full term of service required by law. Moreover, they still are at the call of the army in case of war or other emergency.

Another source of concern for the war department is the considerable number of civil employees, scientific men and skilled mechanics, leaving

THE HOME GARDEN

Conducted by Prof. R. J. H. DeLoach, Director, Experiment Station, Experiment Ga.

CONTINUATION OF LAST WEEK'S ARTICLE ABOUT SCHOOLS AND FOREST SUBSIDIES. Can the school undertake to aid in developing the forest idea? There seems to be no doubt about this, even though it has been tried very little.

When to Collect Seed. Most seed ripen in the fall and should be gathered then. Red and silver maples are exceptions. As a general thing we should gather seed immediately after they are ripe, so many things happen to them to make poor germination.

How to Store Seed. This is a problem. Acorns are sometimes stored in sand to keep them from drying out. It is generally sufficient to keep them in some kind of paper where there is little or no danger from getting too moist.

When to Plant. Plant in spring as early as you can after danger of frost is over. In the case of maples and elms, plant after the first of May.

How to Make the Bed. For the nursery, make the rows about four feet apart and set the seed in the middle of the rows.

When to Plant. Plant in spring as early as you can after danger of frost is over. In the case of maples and elms, plant after the first of May.

GET THE RIGHT MAN FOR THE RIGHT JOB

If every employer could get the right man on the right job, the problem of running a business would be settled. The lost motion resulting from the wrong man or the wrong job would be eliminated and the time and money wasted would be saved.

Perhaps such a condition will never prevail, but every time a "Help Wanted" ad is inserted in The Constitution a move is made in that direction. From the number of answers received from a "Help Wanted" ad in this paper, the employer can easily find the right man for the right job.

Clifford Walker Describes Whirlwind Race That Landed Him Attorney Generalship

HON. CLIFFORD WALKER, Georgia's new attorney general, in two characteristic poses.

Clifford Walker, of Monroe, Ga., took the oath of attorney general of Georgia at the statehouse yesterday. That the vote of the people of Georgia enabled him to do this was due not only to his genuine worth as a man, his lovable qualities of character and his ability as a lawyer, but also to one of the most remarkable campaigns ever conducted in Georgia.

Mr. Walker, in his campaign, visited practically every county in Georgia, from Rabun Gap to Tybee Light, and shook hands with easily more than one-half of the actual voters in the state, to say nothing of their families.

MEMORY FOR NAMES AND PEOPLE.

Mr. Walker's memory for people and names is remarkable one day not so long ago he was at lunch in an Atlanta restaurant. His eye fell upon a gentleman who was facing away from him. He went over and spoke to him. When he returned he said: "That is Dr. McIntosh, of Thomasville."

DEMOCRATIC IN LIFE AND IDEALS.

Born of parents of good circumstances, though not wealthy, a college graduate, he is essentially a democratic in his ideals and life. He has incorporated into his character a principle taught by his father—that a man who is honest and works hard is all right, however humble his source or plain his clothes.

KNOWLEDGE OF STATE.

In his campaign for the office of attorney general political success was not all that he found. He gathered a store of intimate knowledge about his own state and his own people which is a treasure that but few men possess. In talking with a Constitution representative several days ago he outlined some of his most salient impressions.

WHERE TRAVELING ISN'T VERY FAST.

"The variety of soils and resources is no greater than of conditions in one county in south Georgia it required three hours to travel nine miles, while in north Georgia, from the railroad terminus at Helen to Kinawasee, in Towns county, it took three hours to travel three hours in climbing six miles over the Blue Ridge mountains—and it was not so much as that I traveled it again this spring.

While much of his success is attributable to this energy, he gives much of the credit to his mother and father. An admirer writes from Forsyth that in a recent address to the Besse Tift college graduates he paid a tribute to his mother which would have done credit to Henry Grady in his prime.

SUPERIOR TO CAPSULES. SANITARY M.D.Y. 24 HOURS. RELIEVES IN. No increase in price. What the Farmer Did. (From Judge.) A city man recently visited with his "country cousin." The man from the city, wishing to explain the joys of the metro life, said that he was certainly having fun for the last few days. Thursday he awoke to find that his cousin was not in bed, then he trooped back to town and danced until morning. The country cousin, not to be outdone in the least, began telling some of the pleasures of the simple life. "We have in the country," he said, "a fine old farm, and we have had some fun here, too. One day we huddled out to Uncle Ned's and went out to the creek to fish. I was so excited all that afternoon. And in the evening we sneaked up to the attic and jockeyed all morning. A sturdy old farmer, who was listening and who was not to be outdone in the least, took up the conversation at this point and said, 'I was having some fun, too, but I was a little muddled to see the creek and get-waded until sundown. Then I appeared up all in the morning and my cousin, after which I bedded down until the clock after, when I breakfasted until it was time to go sailing again.' In thirty-one consecutive days, 440 miles, I have recently fallen on my back."
